Tony Popovic is this season's Argo

By Andrew Bishara

It's going to be hard to look pass Tony Popovic for Manager of the Season. Very hard. Come the End-of-Season Awards, if Popovic's name isn't read out, there is some serious problems in the heart of the players' association. However, I highly doubt that they would make such a decision. The other awards up for grabs: the Johnny Warren Medal, Golden Boot, Goalkeeper of the Year and so forth, will go down to the wire. The Manager of the Year is such a certainty; it's the equivlant of Argo in the Oscars race: there can be no other winner.

Given a fresh new squad to mould together, few and I mean, very few expect the Western Sydney Wanderers to make such an impact. Making the finals would of been overachieved. Finishing the season as the Premiers Plate winners is like Liverpool jumping the gun and winning the Premier League. That's no disrespect to any of the Western Sydney players. We knew success was going to come, just not this fast. The nine consecutive wins is the pinnacle of how effectively Popovic has put his touch on the team. A defender by trade, its no wonder the Wanderers have the best defensive record in the league. For a time there, the Wanderers couldn't score. It was as Popovic was making his team too defensive, too counter-attactive, too much of a defender's team; where the 0-0 is better than losing.

The plan in the end was to establish a solid defence. Popovic knows that defence wins championships, not goal scorers. Time was the only factor. Once everyone understood their roles, the emphasis on working hard, the goals would come. And the emphasis on working hard isn't an understatement. After notching win after win, Popovic didn't give his teams a time for a breather. He doubled the training sessions. "Tony will put on a drill and ensure the boys take it on themselves to take on the drills with very high intensity. Although it is hard work, it is always focused tactically on the opponents we are taking on," defender Adam D'Apuzzo told Foxsports.com. "What I've seen from Poppa is his level of detail – down to the small details in the game," D'Apuzzo said "He and (assistant coach) Ante Milicic really analyse the game for hours on the opposition, so we improve and know what to counter" That quick look inside the camp highlights the importance of tactics to the Wanderers. Tactics don't win games though, players do and Popovic has been a revelation in his man-management skills.

The Wanderers players adore him; he's given many of them a fresh start. Nikolai Topor-Stanley, Mark Bridge, Michael Beauchamp are just some that have been reborn under his tutelage. Not to forget the success of Shinji Ono. At first, his impact wasn't of the same level of the two other marquee signings, Del Piero and Heskey. Steadily his impact grew and now it's hard to see the Wanderers without him. Mariners coach Graham Arnold said that the "premiership plate is nearly gone. Western Sydney Wanderers have got two hands on it now." In response to this comment, Popovic walked out and said, calm and cool as always, that "the job is not done...there is still some work to be done, and this group knows that."

Everyone knows how much hard work Popovic has put into the team. That hard work has given him the accolades he deserves. Frightening its not over yet. The Wanderers are the favourites for the Championship and while anything can happen in the next month of football, there is one certainty: Popovic is this season's Argo; there's just no stopping him.

Bunyodkor snatched a late draw at home to Pohang Steelers in the AFC Champions League on Wednesday, while Djibril Cisse starred. Mirjalol Qosimov's Bunyodkor, semi-finalists last year, needed until the dying moments to secure a 2-2 draw against three-time champions Pohang in Tashkent.

They took a 15th-minute lead in the Group G clash as Oleksandr Pishchur finished smartly after receiving a long pass.

But Pohang equalised through Myeong-Ju Lee in the 60th minute before Gwang-Hoon Lee headed them in front soon after.

Just as the K-League side looked set to collect all three points, substitute Kamoliddin Murzoev slid in to equalise in the 94th minute, diverting in Jasur Hasanov's shot-cum-cross.

Bunyodkor are top of the group thanks to the late equaliser as second-placed Beijing Guoan recorded a 2-1 win at home to Sanfrecce Hiroshima.

Piao Cheng scored the winner in the 79th minute, firing an effort from just outside the area into the bottom corner.

In Group C, Cisse led Al Gharafa to a 3-1 win over Sepahan at Thani Bin Jassim Stadium in Doha.

On loan from Queens Park Rangers, Cisse cancelled out Mohammad Ahmadi's 14th-minute opener before putting his side ahead in the second half.

Majdi Siddiq sealed the points with his goal in additional time.

An Amad Al Hosni brace led Saudi side Al Ahli three points clear atop the group with their 2-1 victory at United Arab Emirates' Al Nasr.

Dazzling Domingues damages determined Mariners recorded maximum points from their first two 2013 AFC Champions League encounters. Back-heeling the ball into the path of the pacey Fujita Masato, Domingues then made a telling run into the box before placing his volley beyond Ryan.

Patrick Zwaanswijk opened the scoring with a powerful header for the Mariners, but the J-league side soon hit back, lead by its classy Brazilian imports.

Central Coast Mariners' anguish from the penalty spot unfortunately continued late on, with substitute Michael McGlinchey striking an effort from 12-yards direct at Sugeno after tireless attacker Mitchell Duke had been tripped in the box. Disappointingly, McGlinchey's penalty effort was the fifth in a row the Mariners have missed in all competitions. While displeased with having lost to Reysol, Central Coast Mariners coach Graham Arnold outlined after the game that the key difference between the two sides on the night was the inspired Domingues – a player believes is better than anyone currently playing in the A-League. "The only difference was their number ten, Domingues," Arnold said. "He's total quality." "His first finish was a great finish. We gave away two cheap goals, and in international football if you give away possession like that you get punished."

"(But) the third goal from them was absolutely world class," he said. The Mariners went into the second game of their 2013 AFC Champions League campaign with a relatively inexperienced line-up, with Arnold opting to fill his first eleven on the evening with as many fresh legs as possible.

The result of Arnold's astute selections was a team full of running, and one able to compete determinedly with a well-oiled Kashiwa side for the majority of the Matchday 2 encounter.

Arnold praised his "kids" who again proved to themselves they can compete on the international stage. "We had five 21-year-olds out there and the performance and the fight tonight was very good, it was more like I expect," he said. "It's an experience for the younger boys and they're only going to get better out of it."

"We finished the game with six or seven young boys. Sure, it hurts to lose away from home but against the top side we're not embarrassed." Despite only having one point from two AFC Champions League games thus far, Arnold believes reaching the second round of Asia's premier club competition is still well within his side's reach.

Gaining three points against Guizhou Renhe in Gosford on Wednesday 3 April will place the Mariners well in the reckoning to advance to the next phase of the tournament, especially given Korea Republic's Suwon Bluewings recorded a scoreless draw at home to the Chinese Super League side this evening.

"We've got to win our homes games now," he said. "We've got the Chinese at home and we've got the Japanese Reysol at home as well." "I am sure we can do that."

Osieck names Socceroos squad for World Cup Asian Qualifier

 Qantas Socceroos Head Coach Holger Osieck named a 23-player squad that will host Oman in a crucial 2014 FIFA World Cup Asian Qualifier at Stadium Australia, Sydney on Tuesday 26 March (Kick-off 7:30pm AEDT). Tim Cahill, Mile Jedinak, Tommy Oar and Tom Rogic return to the Qantas Socceroos squad after missing last month's friendly against Romania and Dino Djulbic receives his second call-up to the Qantas Socceroos squad after making his senior international debut at the EAFF East Asian Cup qualifiers in Hong Kong last December.

Osieck has included six (6) Hyundai A-League players in Eugene Galekovic (Adelaide United), Mark Milligan (Melbourne Victory), Jade North (Brisbane Roar), Mat Ryan (Central Coast Mariners), Archie Thompson (Melbourne Victory) and Michael Thwaite (Perth Glory).

The Qantas Socceroos will be without the services of Lucas Neill and Carl Valeri who will both serve one match suspensions for the accumulation of yellow cards from previous nal round of the 2014 FIFA World Cup Asian Qualifiers with a win against Iraq (2-1), draws against Oman (0-0) & Japan (1-1) and a loss against Jordan (1-2) in matches. Oman are in fourth place of Group B after a win over Jordan (2-1), draws with Australia (0-0) and Iraq (1-1) and two losses to Japan (0-3 & 1-2). The 2014 FIFA World Cup Asian Qualifier between the Qantas Socceroos and Oman will be broadcast exclusively live on FOX SPORTS HD 1 from 6:30pm (AEDT). The exclusive free to air broadcaster SBS TV will broadcast the match on SBS One & SBS HD from 8pm (AEDT).

Bridges re-signs for Jets

 The Hunter Ports Newcastle Jets have re-signed Michael Bridges to a one-year playing contract. Bridges' agreement includes involvement with the Emerging Jets program in the Jets off-season.

After arriving at the Jets midway through the 2009/10 season, Bridges quickly developed into a favourite amongst the Club's Members and supporters.

"We are delighted Michael has re-signed with the Club for next season, and in addition, to have him involved with our Juniors is a major boost for our region," CEO Robbie Middleby said.

The former English Premier League striker has made 51 A-League appearances for Newcastle during his four seasons at the Club, scoring

10 goals. "I'm delighted to be able to spend another season playing at the Jets," Bridges said. "My family and I are very happy in Newcastle and we love the lifestyle here, so it's great to settle down and have my future sorted."

The 34-year-old said he has never felt fitter and is confident he can continue to be a big contributor to the Jets both on and off the park. "I'm my biggest critic and I've said since day one of pre-season that I've never felt this fit, never felt this strong," Bridges said.

Thankfully I got the chance to show that. I'm playing better football and looking leaner and fitter than I was when I arrived three years ago.

"Hopefully I can pass on some wisdom and some knowledge and help bring our younger players along."

Galekovic rewarded with Socceroos call up

 Adelaide United FC captain Eugene Galekovic's stellar form between the posts has been rewarded with selection in the Qantas Socceroos squad for the upcoming World Cup qualifier against Oman in Sydney on March 26.

The Reds' inspirational shot stopper was one of three goalkeepers named in Qantas Socceroos Coach Holger Osieck's 23-player squad for the match, Galekovic joined by veteran Mark Schwarzer and Central Coast Mariners custodian Mathew Ryan.

Despite not being a stranger to national team selection, which included being part of Australia's 2010 World Cup squad in South Africa, Galekovic admits he was somewhat surprised to be given the call up to the squad for such a big game.

"I was a little bit (surprised) considering all of the players from Europe and the Middle East were coming back, so it's a surprise but I'm happy to go to Sydney and meet up with the boys," Galekovic said after the announcement this morning.

To date, Galekovic has made four appearances and recorded two clean sheets for the Qantas Socceroos, and while he knows Schwarzer is likely to be given the nod against Oman, he is relishing the opportunity to go into camp and put his best foot forward.

The prospect of possibly going to another World Cup is also an incentive for the 31 year old, who knows if he continues to focus on doing well between the posts for Adelaide United, he will be in the mix.

"It's always good to go there and try to prove yourself, and if something does pop up in the near future then you have something in Holger's mind that you have a chance," Galekovic said. "Getting a sniff now it gives you that feeling that you're in with a chance again, but it's about performing every week for your club and if you do that, hopefully the coach picks the players that deserved to be picked."

On his selection, the dual Hyundai A-League Goalkeeper of the Year also paid credit to Reds Goalkeeper Coach Peter Blazincic, who has worked with Galekovic since he arrived in Adelaide in 2007.

"Since I've been here Peter Blazincic has helped me a lot, he's one of the top goalkeeping coaches in the country and credit goes to him as well," Galekovic said.

Galekovic's call up means he will miss the Reds' match against the Central Coast Mariners on Sunday 24 March, although the Mariners will also be without their number one keeper Ryan.

Galekovic will fly out to Sydney to join the Qantas Socceroos squad on Monday.

Eugene Galekovic leads out Adelaide United on Monday night.

adidas Charity Strip raises over $10,000 for Life Flight

The adidas-Wellington Phoenix Charity Strip used in the game against Adelaide United on 24 February has raised over $10,000 for Life Flight.

Wellington Phoenix General Manager David Dome said the Club was pleased that the association has again raised valuable funds for a worthwhile charity. The strips were auctioned on TradeMe with the online auction site refunding all success fees back to the charity. $8,704 was raised through the auction of the strips, with another $1,903 being raised in a collection on game day meaning over ten and a half thousand dollars was raised in total.

Adama Traore Out For A Month

 Melbourne Victory Football Club can confirm that Adama Traore will be sidelined for at least the next three to four weeks, although the extent of the damage to his injured ankle is yet to be fully determined.

The 23-year-old was stretched off in the 65th minute of Saturday night's 1-all draw with Brisbane Roar.

While x-rays showed there was no fracture, an MRI revealed a high-ankle ligament tear. Traore and the club's medical staff will meet with a surgeon tomorrow to determine the best course of action.

Melbourne Victory Coach Ange Postecoglou said the news was extremely disappointing.

"There's no doubt that Adama has been fantastic for us this season and he's been an integral part of our defensive structure," Postecoglou said. "We're hopeful that Adama won't require surgery and that he'll be back before the end of the season, but if he does need an operation his rehabilitation will obviously be longer. "While we're very disappointed for Adama, this setback will provide an opportunity for someone else to step-up in his absence."

Traore joins injured midfielder Gui Finkler and defender Nick Ansell on the sidelines, although the latter started running again this week in a bid to be fit for the finals series also.

A-LEAGUE TEAM OF THE WEEK Round 24

Compiled by Steven Talevski

Star Man

Terry Antonis
Sydney FC

It's not usual that a central midfielder gets this award, but the youngster sure did deserve it. Antonis was solid when defending but also a real threat in attack which was highlighted when he assisted Joel Chianese for Sydney's second. Antonis looks set to have a major role in Sydney attempting to cement a spot in the finals.

GK: Eugene Galekovic – Adelaide's number one was the pick of the bunch this week in the goalkeeping department after making two crucial saves early in the game off Nick Kalmar and Josip Tadic strikes.

RB: Jerome Polenz – The German was in fine form against the Phoenix and played a crucial role in Shinji Ono's opener.

CB: Adam Griffiths – Leaking goals has been a major problem for the Sky Blues this season, however this was overturned this weekend as Griffiths stared in the centre of defence.

CB: Michael Thwaite – With Socceroos selection this week, Thwaite threw his name back into the ring after a superb performance for the Glory in their away win against Newcastle.

LB: Rhyann Grant – Playing on the left side of defence this week, Grant helped stabilise the Sydney defence as they managed to keep title contenders Central Coast goalless.

RW: Ivan Franjic – Moved into midfield this week, Franjic was as influential in an attacking sense with his runs down the right wing. His willingness to attack led to the Roar equalising through his strike early in the second half.

RCM: Leigh Broxham – Broxham managed to get himself on the score sheet after a stunning leap that saw him header the ball into the back of the net as the Victory managed to walk away from Suncorp Stadium with a draw.

CM: Mateo Poljak – After being clobbered by the ball early into the game, Poljak managed to play all 90 minutes as the Wanderers extended their lead on top of the table.

LCM: Terry Antonis – With Socceroos manager Holger Osieck in the crowd, the youngster had one of his best performances in a Sky Blue shirt and played a major role in Sydney's second goal which essentially sealed the game.

LW: Mark Bridge – The Western Sydney attacker found himself on the score sheet once again scoring the winner against Wellington.

ST: Jeremy Brockie – His goal away to the Wanderers put him equal first with Daniel McBreen on the A-League goal scoring charts, and could have been the sole leader as he found the wood work late in the game.

Coach: Frank Farina – An impressive two nil victory saw Sydney FC move into fifth position on the table. Since taking over Sydney, Farina has had ups and downs, but the victory against the Mariners saw him put out a team that was defensively stable and a real threat in attack.

Thwaite's Late Winner Keeps Glory In Finals Hunt

By Shaun Dyas

Perth Glory had their star goalkeeper Danny Vukovic to thank as they escaped Hunter Stadium with a 2-1 win against the Newcastle Jets.

The crowd of 10,807 was treated to a superb performance from the Perth custodian as he continually kept Newcastle at bay with a string of superb saves, underlining his undoubted quality.

Michael Thwaite hit the winner deep into stoppage time from a Perth corner which kept the visitors chances of a finals spot alive. Matias Cordoba and Adam Taggart were also on target in a match the home side dominated in every department except on the scoreboard.

Perth is now equal sixth on the A-League ladder and has drastically enhanced their chances of playing finals football. The Jets on the other hand are still in fifth but have played two more matches than their nearest rivals.

Earlier, Newcastle looked destined to score in the 4th minute. A cross was whipped in wide from the right and was headed down by Craig Goodwin straight to the feet of Michael Bridges. He squared a superb pass to Adam Taggart who shot from six yards only to see an inspired Danny Vukovic tip the ball over the cross bar.

Perth gave away a free kick in the 10th minute and the Jets should have again taken the lead. Captain Ruben Zadkovich bent in the free kick which found an unmarked Connor Chapman only six yards from goal. Chapman will never have a better opportunity to open his a-League account as he sent the golden chance wide and Perth escaped again.

Against the run of play it was the Glory who took the lead in the 24th minute, making Newcastle pay for their wastefulness. Chris Harold was released down the right flank for the Glory and cut back a brilliant ball to the feet of Argentine import Matias Cordoba. He beat a desperate Marko Jesic before rifling a shot past Mark Birighitti into the net from the edge of the area.

Newcastle was again left rueing what should have been an equaliser in the 33rd minute. Craig Goodwin slipped a pass out wide to Zadkovich who crossed directly to the feet of English Striker Michael Bridges. He touched to control the ball and then proceeded to blaze over from 12 yards with the goal at his mercy.

The Jets deservedly equalised right on the stroke of half time. Marko Jesic picked the ball up in the hole and drove at the heart of the Glory. He slipped a pass through to former Glory player Adam Taggart. He punished his old club with an unerring right footed strike that nestled perfectly in the bottom corner, leaving Vukovic with no chance. In truth, the shot had to be that accurate as Vukovic was playing superbly.

Both coaches' instructions seemed to work at the interval as both sides came out much more structured and organised, ensuring space was at a premium. Michael Bridges was starting to become more influential, dropping into space and releasing players at will which led to a corner.

Vukovic excelled himself again in the 61st minute from the corner.

Goodwin played in a sumptuous delivery that was partially cleared before falling to Dominik Ritter at the back post. His first time volley was only kept at bay by the fingertips of the Perth gloveman and away for a corner via the bar.

James Virgili almost scored his first A-League goal in the 68th minute. The ball was played over the top and the youngster used his blinding speed to get to the ball before Perth left back Scott Jamieson. His shot flew over the cross bar to the relief of Perth Gloveman Vukovic.

By this stage the home side were really beginning to dominate possession and territory and it seemed only a matter of when the goal would come. The Glory goal was under constant pressure and was only surviving through a mixture of poor finishing from the Jets and some superb keeping by Vukovic.

Newcastle's only danger was the possibility that they may switch off at the back and Shane Smeltz fired a warning shot with a header late in the second half.

The Jets failed to heed the warning and now have a nervous wait to see if they will still be in a position to qualify for the finals.

Sky Blues Dent Mariners Premier Plate Hopes

By Adrian Deans

Sydney FC moved back into fifth place and claimed a sixth straight home victory after a comprehensive 2-0 win over the Central Coast Mariners at Allianz Stadium.

Goals to Sebastian Ryall and Joel Chianese helped Sydney make it back-to-back wins over the Mariners in front of a healthy home crowd of 16,155.

Sydney FC coach Frank Farina made three changes to the side with the injured Lucas Neill, suspended Fabio and Ali Abbas replaced in the starting side by Tiago Calvano, Ryall and Terry Antonis.

Tiago stepped in and contributed to an assured defensive performance for the home side, Antonis played one his best matches in a Sky Blue shirt and Ryall came up with the opening goal.

Sydney looked the most dangerous in the first half after a cagey opening and produced a string of chances, to the delight of a boisterous home crowd.

A clever change of direction from Alessandro Del Piero created space for Joel Griffiths in the 7th minute, but his cross flashed across the face of goal. Terry McFlynn then tried his luck from range, but his shot flashed over the bar.

Brett Emerton had the best opportunity of the opening period in the 10th minute after some brilliant lead up work from Del Piero, but his shot was blocked by a scrambling Josh Rose.

The home side looked solid in defence, with the Mariners reduced to a few half-chances, the best of which fell to Pedj Bojic in the 22nd minute but he sprayed his shot wide.

Ryall broke the deadlock three minutes later with a fierce shot that deflected off the Mariners'

Trent Sainsbury after some nice lead up work from recently re-signed skipper McFlynn.

Michael McGlinchey forced his way through on goal in the 36th minute but his deflected shot fell tamely into the arms of Sydney keeper Vedran Janjetovic.

Sydney continued to stifle the Mariners in the second half, and by the 60th minute coach Graham Arnold had seen enough, emptying his bench in search of a goal.

Despite the Mariners' fresh legs, the Sydney defence stood tall as the visitors threw numbers forward in a desperate attempt to claim something out of the match.

The best chance for the Central Coast came in the 62nd minute when Mariners defender Trent Sainsbury spurned sent a header over the crossbar with an empty net.

Del Piero then had the fans on their feet again, cleverly cutting inside Josh Rose, but his wicked shot was saved brilliantly by Ryan.

Sydney doubled their lead in the 73th minute when substitute Chianese scored his first goal of the season, finishing clinically past Matt Ryan after a brilliant one-two with Antonis.

The Mariners continued to have the better of possession, but most of that came in their own half as the Sky Blues defended well as a unit to ensure the visitors couldn't convert it into genuine chances.

McBreen had a chance to pull one back with full time approaching, but his lofted touch flew over the crossbar with just the keeper to beat.

Chianese had a chance to double his tally late in injury time, but his lobbed shot fell just wide of the upright.

Sydney will look to extend their unbeaten home run to seven next Saturday when they take on Melbourne Victory at Allianz Stadium. Kick off for that match is at 7.45pm

Roar and Victory Share Spoils In Quality Clash

By Jarrod Ellis

Melbourne Victory gathered some measure of revenge for their heavy early season defeat to Brisbane Roar at Suncorp Stadium, playing out a 1-1 draw with the hosts at the same venue on Saturday night.

The draw means Ange Postecoglou is yet to secure three points against his former side. The presence of their former manager once again seemed to bring the best from the mean in orange, turning in a second half performance that showed they can still pose a threat should they creep into the finals.

In what was a hard fought match a draw was the right result on the night, but Brisbane will no doubt be the unhappier of the two teams as the single point leaves the Roar just outside of the finals places.

Surprise wins for Perth and Sydney had put the onus on the home side to take all three points and maintain their spot in the top six.

Melbourne on the other hand was under less pressure, three points ahead of Adelaide United and eight points behind the Wanderers. With the Reds form only able to be described as "erratic" at best Ange Postecoglou's men seemingly have little to play for ahead of the finals.

Berisha forced Nathan Coe into the first save of the match eight minutes in, a penetrative high ball from Stefan Nijland found the Albanian racing into the box but Berisha was unable to loop his header over the Victory keeper.

In contrast Leigh Broxham didn't waste his headed chance only a minute later.

Broxham leapt spectacularly to meet a lofted cross from Archie Thompson, heading the ball into the top corner of Michael Theo's goal.

The Brisbane defence was caught ball watching, allowing Thompson to dwell on the box and for Broxham to arrive late into the box unmarked for a towering header.

Thompson had the home supporter's hearts in their mouths a little later, finding space in the Brisbane penalty area only to slip before getting a shot off, thwarted by a pitch left in atrocious condition brought about by seemingly three weeks worth of constant rain and the previous night's NRL match.

Victory very nearly had a second on 28 minutes, Billy Celeski heading a ball down for Mark Milligan but the resultant shot flashed wide of the far post.

A second should have arrived four minutes later, this time only a wonderful reaction save from Theo was enough to keep out a poked effort from Daniel Mullen, the Victory defender having found himself on the back post for a Marco Rojas free kick.

Theo was called into action once again shortly before halftime, this time getting down well to save a shot from Thompson after the striker was played into the penalty box by Rojas.

Brisbane's efforts in the Victory half of the pitch were finally rewarded fifteen minute into the second half. A superb outside foot pass from Luke Brattan back on the halfway line unleashed Ivan Franjic down the right, the converted right-back stormed into the box and placed his shot between the legs of Coe.

The goal brought Brisbane to life, the home team surged forward and what looked a likely goal to Nijland was wasted after another poor cross, a recurrent problem for the Roar on the night.

Brisbane continued to surge forward as the half wore on, the introduction of Mitch Nichols added some impetus to the Brisbane attack and the Victory defence were sitting increasingly deep.

Thompson had a quality chance to put his side ahead in the 78th minute, collecting a cut back just above the penalty spot but scrambling Brisbane defence and a poor first touch was just enough to prevent Thompson from releasing a shot.

As has so often been the case in recent years Brisbane finished the stronger of the two sides and could have snatched the win with only a minute remaining in injury time aside from an excellent save from Coe that kept out a long range Ben Halloran strike.

It's all about the building of confidence and getting ready for the finals now for Adelaide United after their first win in seven away trips in Melbourne secured their top four spot. Whilst Newcastle are still in the hunt when they visit Hindmarsh on Friday night.

With just 2 games left to play for the Jets, this is a must win game, as they only find themselves one point ahead of Brisbane, two ahead of Perth and three ahead of Heart, whom all have one game in hand respectively. The Jets welcome back former Red Zenon Caravella as he returns from injury, which head coach van Egmond cherishes.

"I think Zenon helps with our build-up in controlling the game and getting the ball forward. He'll be coming straight back into the starting line-up."

But the Hindmarsh crowd with not get to see marquee Emile Heskey as he is still struggling with a calf strain. Taylor Regan is also available after coming back from suspension. It doesn't get much bigger than this for the Jets. Failure to win at Hindmarsh will leave them facing the daunting task of beating potential Champions Western Sydney on the final day, whilst hoping for others to them a favour. Maybe an advantage for Newcastle is Adelaide can perhaps take the foot of the gas? Not a chance.

The Reds will now be setting their sights on third place and pip interstate rivals Victory. Adelaide will be full of confidence after last week's win, especially Dario Vidosic, who finally netted for the first time in 2013. Valkanis said it was vital the team won in preparation for the last couple of games.

"I've always had belief in the group and we can see how the boys are responding and how hard they're working."

New boy Jake Barker-Daish could be in line for his second consecutive start after an impressive debut, while Fabio Ferreira is eager to get back into the starting lineup after his injury comeback.

Also Bruce Djite might be fit, making the Reds injury table almost empty going into the business end of the season.

There was more great news for Adelaide this week as skipper Eugene Galekovic has been called up to the Socceroo squad for their World Cup Qualifiers.

There are always repercussions when a team loses. For the Melbourne Heart, the fallout to its spiritless loss to Adelaide United, its second consecutive loss in a row could be the most severe. It is now in danger of missing out on the finals, unless it claims the nine points left in the season. Yet the fight and urgency in the previous performances are nowhere to be seen.

"We haven't won coming from behind yet this season. When things are going well, and they have been at home, we're probably one of the best teams to watch," Heart coach John Aloisi admitted after the game.

"When we went a goal down, the team's heads dropped too easily. That was disappointing because that's happened quite a few times this year."

That's a surprising factor, considering that the Heart have an imperious home record. Everyone is well aware that their away form has been dreadful to say the least. The problem is so evident that Aloisi admitted that unless his side conquers their away fears, they don't deserve to be in the finals.

"We had been winning at home on a consistent basis, but we had made it hard on ourselves by not picking up points away from home. Now we have to turn that around. Win at home next week and then pick up points away from home," said Aloisi. The task for the Heart gets even harder as they welcome the elected Premiers, the Western Sydney Wanderers at AAMI Park. On the back of nine consecutive victories in a row, the Wanderers are the league's in-form side. Few would have thought that Tony Popovic would lead the Wanderers to such a position at the start of their first season.

The Wanderers will get a home final, regardless of what happens in the weeks ahead. Yet Popovic is not one to rest on his laurels, admitting that despite Central Coast Mariners boss, Graham Arnold saying that the race for the Premiership Plate is over, Popovic doesn't believe it.

"While it's mathematically possible of course they're still in contention. If they weren't we'd be celebrating right now," said Popovic, following the win over Wellington. "There's three games to go and we're only five in front so we've still got a job to do and that group of players definitely knows that."

It's moments like this in football that spring a surprise. Making ten wins on the bounce would be an enormous effort, especially considering just how short the A-League season is, but perhaps Popovic and his Wanderers would prefer a slip-up now, as opposed to losing the semi-final.

Aloisi and the Heart are fighting for their season now. They understand that they will have to play out of their skins and hope for some dominos to fall their way. Starting off with a win over the favourites would be start, but it probably won't be good enough to match the Wanderers. A tight draw to settle the account.

Sydney FC v Melbourne Victory

Sat Mar 16 Allianz Stadium 7:45pm

By Matt McNamara

The Big Blue returns for another edition this Saturday evening at Allianz Stadium as a somewhat resurgent Sydney FC play host to bitter rivals Melbourne Victory.

Sydney are looking to make a late surge towards the finals series, and currently sit in 5th position having defeated the Central Coast Mariners last weekend, courtesy of goals from Sebastian Ryall and Joel Chianese. Melbourne Victory are looking to get their season back on track after a late season dip in form and a win for the Victory will confirm they will host a Finals match in Round 1 of the finals series.

The last time these sides met in Sydney, it was Victory who took the 3 points back to Melbourne as youngster Andrew Nabbout scored a glorious brace including an injury time winner in what was Ian Crooks final game in charge. Sydney will be looking to avenge that loss, and the somewhat humiliating loss to Victory at AAMI Park on Australia Day as Victory ran out 3-1 winners in a game that saw both Fabio and Tiago Calvano sent off.

Frank Farina spoke earlier in the week regarding his teams recent improvement in their discipline and Sydney will need to keep a full squad on the park if they are to combat the likes of Archie Thompson and Marco Rojas. Sydney have defeated Victory only once in their past 11 outings and will be looking to stop Thompson from scoring his tenth goal against them since the A-League began.

Sydney have the leagues worst defensive record and with the absence of Socceroo Captain Lucas Neill this week through injury, the Sky Blues will be looking to Italian Marquee Alessandro Del Peiro to continue his push towards the top of the A-Leagues scoring charts. The Italian has scored 12 goals so far this season, and sits only 3 behind the leagues top scorer in Jeremy Brockie.

CC Mariners v Brisbane Roar

Sun Mar 17 Bluetongue Stdm 5:00pm

By Adrian Deans

In the last few years the Roar have been the most feared opponents at Bluetongue.

For most of this year, the Mariners have had no reason to fear Brisbane – indeed, they beat them easily in Round 8 – but that has changed. The Roar are back in form with a lot to play for, and the Mariners are looking like they wish the season was over.

How on earth has this happened?

Just a few weeks ago, the Mariners were shoe-ins for the Premier's Plate and Mike Mulvey looked like he would be following Rado Vidosic either up or out at any moment.

Since then, Brisbane have come Roaring back and the Mariners have learnt how to lose.

How?

I can't believe how wrong I got my preview of Mariners v Sydney FC last week. I expected a thrashing by a Mariners team desperate to avenge their undeserved loss to the Wanderers the week before, but instead we saw the most abject and disconnected performance of the year by Graham Arnold's team (admittedly, on a pitch that was a total disgrace).

Most teams have a slump each season and the Mariners are mired in the midst of theirs. But where do slumps come from?

I believe the Mariners' slump is the product of their unorthodox penalty policy of recent times whereby the senior players have been given the responsibility of deciding, at the time, who should take penalties.

They got it wrong. Badly wrong. And all those missed penalties have meant a loss of points, confidence and momentum.

You don't chop and change with penalty takers. You give the job to a striker and you tell him he keeps the job no matter how many he misses (even if you might eventually take it away). Does anyone seriously believe that Daniel McBreen would have missed four in a row?

If he had taken the penalties, and scored at least two out of those four missed, the Mariners would be in a very different position. They'd have 2 – 5 more points in the A-League and maybe two more points in the ACL. What would that mean for their table positions and confidence?

Brilliant teams can learn how to lose, and this is what has happened to the Mariners. They lost or drew a number of games they deserved to win, and all of a sudden they're playing like a team that will somehow find a way to lose.

Brisbane, on the other hand, are playing like a good team back in form and the Mariners will be embarrassed at home if they can't pull themselves out of the slump.

Go back to basics Arnie. Get your team playing fast one and two touch again to find the man in space.

And give the penalties to McBreen.

Perth Glory v Wellington Phoenix

By Joe Gallagher

If Perth Glory are to make a run to the finals series this season, the visit of Wellington Phoenix this weekend is simply a must-win.

The visitors, who sit dead last and must travel the width of the continent in the longest domestic road trip in world football, are now consigned to spending the rest of the season spoiling the parties of the sides above them.

And while that might not seem an overly lucrative proposition, the prospect – albeit slim – of avoiding the wooden spoon will be at the forefront of interim coach Chris Greenacre's mind as he takes on the difficult task of motivating the Phoenix for the final two matches of the season. The two may be final two fixtures with the club.

He can take some heart from the guts shown in a 2-1 loss to high-flying Western Sydney on Sunday evening. It took two penalties to separate the sides, and while Wellington were the second best side on the day, they dominated for patches and showed unmistakeable glimpses of promise.

They have on their side the league's equal-leading scorer in Jeremy Brockie, who will no doubt have his own personal ambitions to usurp Daniel McBreen at the top of the goalscoring charts. He may be accompanied by Stein Huysegems in the starting eleven, who returns after serving a one-match suspension.

In Perth they find an opponent that will be high on confidence and even higher on ambition, after a last-gasp

A-League season must be extended

A-League Rewind

By Robert Di Fabio

Socceroos boss Holger Osieck has named his 23-man squad for Australia's crucial World Cup Qualifier against Oman later this month, however much of the focus in the media conference was seemingly in relation to the length of the A-League season, and the competition's failure to recognise international breaks on the football calendar.

A frustrated Osieck reiterated his desire to see the Australian domestic competition extended, pointing out to the extended lay-off between the end of the finals series in April, and Australia's three vital World Cup Qualifiers in June.

The Australian coach revealed he had recently held discussions with A-League boss Damien De Bohun about the league's programing, however he isn't too confident his sentiments will be taken on board.

"(De Bohun) came to see me and wanted to get some input," Osieck said about the scheduling. "So far I haven't seen any changes."

Unlike previous years, A-League players are now in serious consideration for national team call-ups, as evidenced by Osieck's recent squad for this month's qualifier, naming six A-League players in his squad.

For this very reason, it becomes a bigger conundrum when the A-League regular campaign culminates at the end of March, with the final series concluding three weeks later.

For players, like Socceroos captain Lucas Neill – who recently signed a short-term stint with Sydney FC – it provides a complex situation, with the possibility of no competitive football for 7-10 weeks leading into the June qualifiers.

With the weight of expectation firmly on Osieck, it makes his task of picking a fit, match-conditioned squad the more difficult.

"My major concern is how do we fill the space between the end of the A-League and the upcoming qualifiers in June," he said.

"The break in the A-League is way too long and it's about time people really reconsider and restructure the A-League dates. Right now it is definitely not very acceptable."

Osieck raises some valid points. While these current circumstances may have been acceptable in the infant stages of the A-League, the competition has now matured in many areas on and off the pitch. It's time for football to stop worrying about the other codes, and look at what's best for our game.

Enough is enough. From next season, the A-League must respect football protocol and have a break on international dates. It may have been acceptable in previous seasons – when the bulk of the Socceroos' representatives plied their trade in Europe – although now, as illustrated in recent months, many players from the A-League are realistically in contention for the national team.

Unlike predecessor Pim Verbeek, Osieck believes the A-League has a realm of talent at its disposal, and can contribute towards the national team's journey towards Brazil 2014.

"People have to learn that despite the importance of the A-League, football is an international game and the Socceroos combine the entire country," he said.

"They have to be number one here and everything that is possible to accommodate the team, in order to make people happy, has to be done.

"I mean the A-League, in all fairness, it's a club business, club interests, you have your supporters they follow your team but the Socceroos are followed by all Australians."

If the A-League does recognise international breaks from next season, the length of the season should be extended by around a month – assuming there isn't an increase in midweek fixtures. While there wouldn't be an increase in competitive matches, this method would somewhat aid in increasing the length of the season. Additionally, clubs who have players selected for the national team won't be unfairly disadvantaged on the pitch, as we've seen on several occasions this season.

In relation to increasing the number of competitive matches per season, realistically this will only occur once FFA decides to lift the lid on its expansion process. However, we may need to wait another four or five years, as no new franchises are anticipated to enter the league in the short-term future. It's highly doubtful that teams will play each other four times per season – with three already a little repetitive given there are only 10 teams in the competition.

Thus, in the short-term, the only other option for more competitive fixtures is, if the proposed FFA Cup is introduced. Given the constant delays on this national cup blueprint, let's not get too excited.

Gatt Calls For More Recognition

Ethihad Stadium may be the best overall for members of the fourth estate, but Bluetongue Stadium has the best food! At least that's what 132 media representatives who participated in a survey of the Football Media Association (FMA) said in a recent survey of venues and facilities.

"Journalists and reporters who cover A-League matches have variable working conditions and access to facilities depending on which stadium they're at," said FMA President, Ray Gatt of The Australian. "Overall, the survey showed that the best stadium from a working media perspective is Ethihad Stadium in Melbourne."

Gatt said the factors covered included the standard of media facilities, space allocations, technology requirements, catering and refreshments, media conference facilities and helpfulness of A-League club staff. "Ethihad rated highest on all measures except catering which, of course, is also something very dear to the stomach's of working media as games tend to be played around meal times.

"A lot of attention is rightly paid to the working conditions of players and team staff on game day, but it's also an important consideration for FMA members and other working media who are critical to helping to promote and build the competition." He said that FMA will take up some of the issues raised direct with stadium or club management, as relevant, during the A-League off season.

"As the A-League reaches higher and higher standards on the field, it is important that venues, FFA and clubs also start to match it with off field issues as well.

"This survey gives us a good body of evidence to have constructive dialogue to help improve the level of access and amenity at our weekend workplaces," said Gatt. He added that another interesting aspect of the survey was the status of employment of working media.

"It's no surprise that less than half are in full time paid employment with a media organisation (42%) but what is striking is the large proportion of people who are in unpaid roles."

Gatt said that 41% who provide coverage of the game are in unpaid roles, while 17% are either part time or casual employees. "FMA believes it is essential that FFA and A-League clubs recognise the legitimate and important contribution this large unpaid, part time and casual workforce makes to the game also.

"It is particularly important as more and more 'news' is 24/7 and online. Traditional news, promotion and coverage sources are not the only sources. Not only are there more and more independent digital football news sites, but non-football media is also providing greater coverage of the game. "One of the issues we intend pursuing with FFA in the off-season is greater access to media accreditation for some of the writers, broadcasters and photographers in these categories," Gatt said.

IGA NSW NPL Launches in Style

The official 2013 IGA NSW National Premier Leagues was launched in the presence of the Men's and Women's National coaches Holger Osieck and Hesterine de Reus and Hyundai A-League coaches Frank Farina from Sydney FC and Western Sydney Wanderers' Tony Popovic.

Reinforcing the outcomes of the National Competition Review, the goal to grow and strengthen Australia's strongest State based league, the new IGA NSW NPL is leading the nation with greater investment in coaching resources, facilities and competition best practice.

A strong coaches panel that consisted of Qantas Socceroos coach Holger Osieck, Westfields Matildas coach Hesterine de Reus, FFA's National Technical Director Han Berger, were accompanied by twenty-four club representatives from both the elite NSW men and women's competitions mingled with the media at the launch.

Football NSW CEO Eddie Moore said, "The NSW Premier League has long been the foundation of producing Australia's elite football talent – both players and Coaches. With the new initiatives and standards introduced under the NPL guidelines, the elite program and competitions in NSW will continue to provide all the National squads with the talent and experience to grow in both men's and women's football.

In building this new model in partnership with the FFA, Football NSW and the Premier clubs, the value, importance and strength of the IGA NSW NPL will see this a landmark day for the development of football in NSW and the nation.

FFA CEO David Gallop confirmed, "Our elite competitions have long been the engine room producing some of Australia's finest footballers as well as coaches which will continue to progress in the right direction under the new IGA NSW National Premier Leagues.

"Today's launch of the National Premier Leagues model gives our competition the status and organisational structure it deserves.

"Apart from the hot bed of talent we see week in week out at the highest level in this state, a strong emphasis has been placed on the quality of coaching which has now further enhanced via the NPL." The NPL model will bring national guidelines for the state and territory elite club competitions for the first time.

The key features of the NPL are;

- A common Nationally recognised brand and logo
 - Qualified Technical Directors at each club
 - Consistent player pathways in each state and territory
 - Player Points System (PPS) to encourage youth development
 - Revised Compensation System to reward clubs producing A-League players
 - Improved finance and business planning under a club licensing scheme
- During the course of the launch an "IGA Charity Shootout" took place with players and special guests throwing their support as money was raised for the Queensland Floods appeal.
- The IGA NSW National Premier Leagues competition kicks off this Saturday while the Women's Premier League commences on the 24th of March.

THUNDER APPEAL FINDINGS ANNOUNCED

Football Federation Australia (FFA) has announced the findings of its Appeals Committee on Dandenong Thunder's appeal from FFV's Appeals Board decision concerning misconduct at the 2012 Victorian Premier League Grand Final at AAMI Park on 14 October, which included the firing of rocket flares.

The FFA Appeals Committee made the following determinations:

- The first five competitive matches of the 2013 season for the Dandenong Thunder Men's Premier League Senior and Reserve teams be played in the absence of any Dandenong Thunder and opposition club members and supporters (excluding players) save that each club will be at liberty to allow a limit of 12 Club Associates to attend to act as coaches and necessary support staff
- The Club is fined $40,000
- The Men's Senior Team is deducted three championship points from the 2013 Victorian Premier League season
- Prior to 30 June, all club members must undertake and complete an FFV Respect and Responsibility Course
- No Dandenong Thunder members shall be admitted to home games after the fifth competitive game of the 2013 season unless each member produces evidence of having attended the FFV Respect and Responsibility Course

FFA's Appeals Committee noted that the match was a "significant day for the VPL, and for football in Victoria generally". Notwithstanding the importance of the club in the Albanian community and more generally in the Dandenong area, it said:

"This was, after all, the showcase of the game in Victoria and the behaviour of the Club's supporters was all the more appalling in that context. Further, and arguably more importantly, spectators, including many children, were put at risk of substantial personal injury by the discharging of flares, particularly rocket flares."

FFV CEO Peter Gome welcomed the decision which, he said, reinforces FFV's commitment to a Zero Tolerance policy when dealing with anti-social behaviour.

"FFV is committed to ensuring that community football matches uphold community standards and provide a safe and family-friendly environment which allows players, officials and spectators to enjoy the game," he said.

"FFV's Zero Tolerance Policy has seen a drastic reduction in overall misconduct since its implementation in 2008 and 2012 saw this trend continue.

"Only 102 matters were brought before the FFV Independent Tribunal in 2012 compared with 155 in 2011." FFV has run many Respect and Responsibility courses to help club members and supporters understand the importance of good behaviour on and off the field and the FFV Independent Tribunal has used this in conjunction with point deductions and possible relegations as an alternative to fines where appropriate.

There were only 50 instances of clubs being fined at tribunal in 2012, compared to 246 in 2011.

Stevo's Corner

Anyone doubting whether the magic of the FA Cup is alive and well need only look at one of the upcoming semi-final's taking place in mid April.

The FA Cup is the oldest association football competition in the world and was first held back in 1871-72.

The FA Cup has a long tradition of lower ranked teams becoming "giant killers". Can either Millwall or Blackburn, the only two non Premier League clubs left in the competition claim this tag and go all the way to claiming the FA Cup? If either of these two clubs is successful in doing so, they will become the first team since West Ham back in 1980 to win the FA Cup from outside of the top division.

The way the FA Cup draw has panned out, it means this scenario is every possibility with the final taking on a David and Goliath battle in the final.

On one side of the draw we will be seeing a finalist coming the teams that currently occupy first, second and fourth spots on the English Premier League table. In what could be labelled a battle of the heavyweight's semi-final, Manchester City will face the winner of the Quarter Final replay between Manchester United and Chelsea. Chelsea is the current defending champions and will be going all out to get back to back FA Cups.

The other side of the draw will see Premier League strugglers Wigan taking on either Millwall or Blackburn, who are facing off in a Quarter Final replay.

These three teams on this side of the draw are proof that the romance and magic of the FA Cup is still well and truly alive.

Whichever of these three teams makes it through to the final to face one of the Premier League heavyweights, will be creating history for their club.

Winning their Quarter Final against Everton, and reaching the semi-finals has already written history for Wigan. This is the first time in their history that the 'Latics' have made it this far in the FA Cup.

Millwall players and fans will be hoping to at least match their clubs efforts in the 2003/04 season, when they made their one and only appearance in the final of the FA Cup. This season they would be hoping to go one step better and go all the way and win the final. Although Blackburn has won the FA Cup six times, the club hasn't lifted the trophy for 85 years. The last time they featured in the final was back in 1960, when they lost the final 3-0 to Wolverhampton Wanderers.

FA CUP Quarter Finals

Everton 0-3 Wigan Athletic Manchester City 5-0 Barnsley
Blackburn Rovers 0-1 Millwall
Manchester United 2-2 Chelsea

Boo's World

SUMMER SERIES

By Mark Boric

Not sure which A-League clubs supporters are scheduled to stage a silent protest this week. It could be Adelaide United in solidarity with coach Michael Valkanis and his damaged-voiced Fox Sports interview. Sydney FC could fight the power over alleged police brutality at the recent Mardi Gras. Hopefully it will be Perth Glory for any reason they can come up with, to spare us from the lamest chant set in existence.

Once again the FFV were able to boast about the success of their Zero Tolerance Policy on anti-social behaviour. Interim CEO Peter Gome was quoted during the week as stating "FFV's Zero Tolerance Policy has seen a drastic reduction in overall misconduct since its implementation in 2008 and 2012 saw this trend continue. Only 102 matters were brought before the FFV Independent Tribunal in 2012 compared with 155 in 2011." It has been that successful that perhaps the FFA should consider implementing it. Massive fines to clubs and the docking of competition points could just about bring an end to the pitch invasions, flare usage and seat smashing that has seen many "active" supporters banned recently. Will the FFA start taking more drastic action?

On the flip side, as Mr Gome begins to further examine the size of the FFV's financial black hole, the other stat he revealed may spark a light bulb: "There were only 50 instances of clubs being fined at tribunal in 2012, compared to 246 in 2011." To emulate AC/DC and get back in black, that figure may have to increase this season.

I had a look at the Team FFV website of Board Election candidate Kimon Taliadoros and was instantly confronted with one of the major problems in the current administration of the game. A graphic outlining the structure of the proposed Team FFV. On the top left, there was the FFV Board, labelled as Team Manager with the job description of Governing. On the top right is the FFV Executive & Administration, labelled as the Coach and with the job description of Organising. Below these groups, are the the FFV Members, labelled Player's - YOU!!! with the job description of playing, obviously enough. So what's missing? How about the FFV Members who have paid millions in affiliation fees that give them no rights whatsoever, the Clubs? They could have the job description of - Paying!

Clubs continue to get weaker, and with the lack of support from the governing bodies it is little wonder. I doubt the current regime think this is a problem, as it has been largely engineered by them. For how much longer will volunteers put up with having to try and be more professional than the paid FFV staff? Can the game handle "Elite" club junior fees edging up towards three to five thousand dollars per child to accommodate the Technical Directors and staff these clubs will require? Crowds continue to decline, but this does not seem to be a problem that needs addressing. It's crowds and sponsors that bring in money, and mutually as one diminishes so will the other. It is all well and good to get the coaching and youth development pathway set-up, but who is going to pay for it?

Turbulent Off-Season To Test Thunder

The 2013 Victorian Premier League season kicks-off on Friday 5 April.

Club: Dandenong Thunder

Final Position Last Season: 1st (VPL Finals Series, regular season and State Knockout Cup champions)

VPL Titles: 1

Last Title: 2012

Head Coach: Chris Taylor

With under a month now until the start of the new VPL season, 2012 premiers Dandenong Thunder will be seeking to back to back titles for the first time in the clubs history. After a scintillating 2012 campaign where the club picked up the treble (The VPL regular season premiership, VPL finals series and State knockout cup) manager Chris Taylor would have only seen future glory ahead for the Thunder this season. These hopes have all but been dashed though following an incident prior to the final whistle of last seasons grand final where a flare was thrown, subsequently injuring two girls, resulting in the club has enduring the offseason from hell. As a result of the violence Football Federation Victoria have handed out their largest fine in recent history (40,000 dollars), as well as docking Dandenong 3 championship points whilst also banning thunder fans from their first 5 home matches of the season. Thunder president Cezar Jakupi has described these brutal sanctions as ‘manifestly excessive’ before claiming that due to “each home match being worth about 15,000 dollars” the club has “effectively been fined 115,000 dollars”. Considering it costs about 200,000 dollars annually to field a top tier VPL side and with many clubs, including Thunder, having experienced financial problems in recent seasons, a fine of this magnitude could indeed “destroy the community club”. With this in mind Jakupi believes that rather than aiming for the title, the club need to be “looking at survival” as their realistic goal for the 2013 season.

Who’s in?

Dandenong have made a few important signings over the off season, these include; Matthew Park: The former Scottish Premier League midfielder will be looking to build on a relatively successful campaign in Scotland last season where he was loaned out to Second Division side East Fife for the 2011-12 season. Luke Hopper: The former Hungerford Town striker will look to build a partnership with Thunder favourite Nate Foster with the former Swindon Town man coming straight from the lower leagues of English football. Steven Topalovic: The former Richmond defender will add some much needed versatility to the Thunder side as well as some added depth in midfield. Zac Walker: The young defender has already made several appearances for the Melbourne Heart

Who’s gone?

As a result of the massive fines the club incurred following the 2012 season there have been various high profile losses from the 2012 first team with experienced players Luke Sherbon, Stuart Webster and Ross Thompson all moving on to Benteleigh Greens. Although there have been no more confirmed departures it is widely expected that the clubs highest earners, such as Bryan Bran and even Nate Foster may be asked to find a new club in order keep costs to an absolute minimum. Following a tumultuous offseason and an exodus of Thunder players likely on the horizon, it is sure to be a new challenge for Thunder manager Chris Taylor who may be forced to part with some of his most senior players in order to keep the club afloat financially. But with some key signings already made, aswell as a board committed to saving the club from financial collapse, the club may still rediscover their form from last season and may push for a top six place but with all things considered, it is surely not going to be another trophy laden season down in Dandenong.

Mullen excited by Victory's finals prospects

DANIEL Mullen breathed a sigh of relief when his agent John Grimaud stitched up a deal for the young central defender to get out of China and come to Melbourne Victory on loan till the end of the season.

The 23-year-old former Adelaide United star was not enjoying pre-season training with Chinese Super League club Dalian Aerbin and his relationship with coach Xu Hong was almost non-existent.

"We started pre-season training on the 5th of January and I think I spoke two words to our coach over the next five weeks," said Mullen.

"His general attitude towards the players meant that it wasn't enjoyable to be there and training was poor.

"I wanted to come back home and keep improving by training and playing at a higher standard. "That Chinese coach is gone now anyway. He actually got done a few weeks ago for match fixing and he's got a five-year ban from football."

Mullen's move to Dalian Aerbin in late June last year (for a reported $230,000 transfer fee) came out of the blue. The South Australian had another year left on his Adelaide contract but was negotiating a new deal with his hometown club.

Dutch outfit Heracles Almelo stepped in and Mullen was set to fly to Holland until negotiations over a transfer fee broke down.

"A couple of days later the China offer came up. The move came out of nowhere really but we agreed quickly and off I went," said Mullen, who penned a two-year deal with the Liaoning province outfit. "The standard in China is so different to the A-League which is really demanding mentally and physically, especially physically.

"If you're not 100 per cent physically when you go into a game in the A-League you're going to get found out and straight away as well.

"Before I got to China I'd had a six-week break with no training, no football, but within three days of arriving I played my first game for Dalian and walked off the pitch like I'd been training all season."

So the A-League is of a higher standard than the Chinese Super League?

"That's a difficult question. The Chinese league is very quick but not as physically demanding. I think the main difference between the leagues is the quality of imports they bring in. These players are different class.

"Just in my team alone I was playing with (former Barcelona star) Seydou Keita, Brazilian Fabio Rochenback (ex-Barca, Middlesborough and Sporting Lisbon), Nigerian international striker Peter Utaka and a boy they brought in from PSG in France, Guillaume Hoarau.

"These types of players won't come to the A-League because of the amount of money they have in China. It's ridiculous how much money they have.

"I was speaking to my mate Ryan McGowan (Shandong Luneng Taishan) who just played my team last week and his club – salary aside and win bonus aside – gave their players one million renminbi (almost $A155,000) to split amongst themselves after winning the game."

Mullen had little problem fitting in at Dalian Aerbin and says bluntly that if Victory hadn't stepped in he'd still be in China in spite of his relationship with his now former coach.

"I actually fitted in really well to be honest. They were very accommodating. The biggest problem was the language barrier because only two of the Chinese boys in the entire squad spoke English.

"But their attitude towards me was good. They saw me as a massive bully to tell you the truth and out on the training park most of them were intimidated by me because of my size compared to them."

But the boot's been on the other foot too and Mullen knows what it's like to feel intimidated.

As a 16-year-old he was playing senior football for SA outfit Para Hills when AIS scouts came down to watch a game.

"I think the AIS scouts came out to watch my cousin Matthew and two other players. I must have had a decent game because they invited me for a trial at the AIS and I must have done okay there too because they picked me for a scholarship."

And that was when Mullen came face to face with the confronting frame of former Socceroo and then AIS head coach Steve O'Connor who is appropriately nicknamed "Rocky".

"I have to be honest. When I first got to the AIS I couldn't stand him because he was such an intimidating character.

"But I found out that he brings out the best in everyone and if you work hard for him he'll do everything he can to make sure you succeed.

"I really can't understand why he isn't involved still whether it's with the AIS or Sydney FC. He's had a massive influence on my career so far."

At the time O'Connor's AIS squad played in the Victorian Premier League and Mullen was part of a slick and elite group of young footballers.

"We had a great team and the VPL was a great competition. Near the halfway mark of our first season we were near the top of the league then we lost most of our starting 11 to A-League clubs."

The AIS was an important stepping stone for Mullen whose eventual switch to Adelaide United came about in slightly controversial fashion. It's a tale of youthful disobedience with a happy ending.

"Steve O'Connor told all of us to go back home over Christmas for a two-week holiday. We hadn't had a real break for a while so he told us not to train but importantly don't train with any A-League clubs.

"So the first day I got back home I called 'Vidi' (Aurelio Vidmar) and asked if I could train. As you do when you're a young guy and you want to do the best you can. So I went and trained for two weeks and 'Vidi' gave me a one-year contract."

That really kick-started Mullen's professional journey. He debuted for Adelaide in its AFC Champions League semi against Uzbek outfit Bunyodkur in 2008 and soon established himself in the senior squad.

On 28 February 2009 he played in the A-league Grand Final against Victory which Adelaide lost 1-0 and a week later he made his one and only Socceroo appearance against Kuwait.

He was living the dream.

"Since as far back as I can remember I always dreamed about playing with Adelaide City in the old NSL then Adelaide United when they first got into the A-League.

"I was a big Adelaide supporter and the club holds a really special place in my heart but that's normal because Adelaide is my home.

"It's a bit like Connor Pain now with Victory. He reminds me so much of myself.

"I was his roommate on the last away trip and just the passion he has for Victory is something I can really understand.

"He said he went to every home game with his mates and he's been right amongst it with the fans and loved every minute of it.

"He reckons it's surreal to be playing for the club he loves so much and that brings back memories of how I felt when I was playing in my first year in the A-League."

Mullen's loan switch to Victory last month raised a few eyebrows. The A-League may be in just its eighth season but it's been around long enough for some definite demarcation lines to be drawn. The Victory-Adelaide line is clearly defined.

"I know that a lot of people in Adelaide were not supportive of my decision, which is understandable. It's the fans that make this game so great and they've got every right to share their opinion.

"I had four years at Adelaide and I've seen the club go through massive changes. When I first got there we had a core group of players who really held the team together but I don't think there's anyone from that group still there.

"It's a completely different squad now and the people behind the club are different too but that's part of football. A lot of good people have left the club which is a shame."

If Mullen had anticipated a slightly frosty welcome to Victory then he would have been well off the mark.

"The Victory fans have been excellent towards me, really positive, really supportive and I'm really grateful for that.

"In terms of the club itself I can't speak highly enough of the professionalism, the facilities, the training, the coaching staff, the playing group – it's probably a step up for me which is great.

"And my (central defensive) partnership with Adrian (Leijer) is getting better with time.

"Obviously the first game I came in and we had a loss and in the second game we didn't have the understanding that was needed.

"But since then I think we have been developing quite well. "I like playing beside him. He's a good leader, a good captain and we're starting to find our feet together.

"Ange (Postecoglou) has big plans for this group and I'm confident that we'll have things worked out just in time for the finals. It's really exciting to be a part of this."

No doubt the excitement is also building in the Mullen family home back in South Australia.

"My family has been a massive influence in my career. Dad (SA legend Joe Mullen) has a great football background and a lot of expertise but he's never pushed me into the sport. It's always been my decision.

"Dad still talks to me after games and gives me tips on how I can improve and it's great. He's someone I can count on and I can trust.

"He's been with me through the whole journey but so has my mum, my brother and my sister.

"My sister Sophie is now 16 years old and she has never missed an A-League game that I've played in. She's my biggest fan. She has every strip that I've played in with my name on the back and she wears every one of them with pride.

"It's great to have such a supportive family."

And if any Victory fans remain sceptical about Mullen's signing I think they are about to find out what a fine young central defender they have in their ranks.

If the Melbourne giant can prize him from Dalian Aerbin's clutches at season's end then his developing defensive partnership with Leijer could well be the bedrock of future success.

VICTORIA'S LEADER IN TEAM WEAR

Australia's first internationalists

Blast From The Past

By Roy Hay

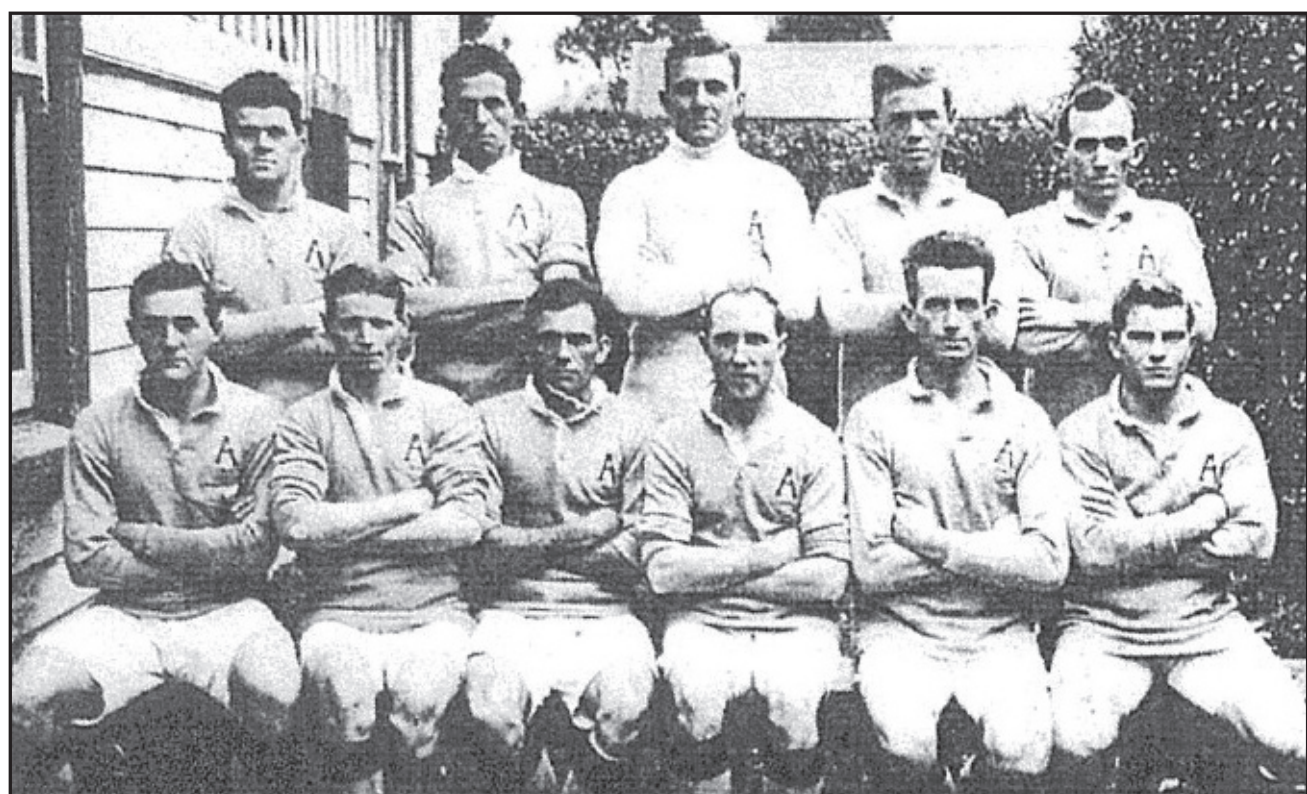

Though football had been played in Australia for nearly a hundred years before that it was not until 1922 that an Australian football team played its first international match. Or at least the first game which has been recognised as such by the current governing body of the game. That year a team consisting entirely of players from New South Wales and Queensland went to New Zealand and played 14 games including three matches which were regarded as Test Matches and hence what we would now call full international games. Prior to the tour the Commonwealth Football Association, which was in nominal charge of the game, had not sanctioned the team as Australia and it was only after the tourists returned and really by default that this became recognised as an Australian national representative team. A New South Wales team had already crossed the Tasman in 1904 while a team from New Zealand had toured parts of Australia in 1905 but it only encountered state and club or district representative sides in New South Wales.

Recently a New Zealand journalist Gavin Bertram contacted Football Federation Australia seeking pictures of the Australian team on that 1922 tour and the FFA passed on the request to me. I was able to direct him to Nick Guoth who has researched the tour and he in turn alerted Gavin to some team and action shots which originally appeared in the Otago Witness on 27 June 1922.

The Australian team which took the field at Carisbrook, Dunedin in the South Island on 18 June 1922 was George Cartwright in goal, Alan Fisher, David Cumberford, C Shenton, Peter Doyle, Bill Maunder, William Dane, Jock Cumberford, Alex Gibb, captain, David Ward and Tom Thompson. The Australians played in a very light blue strip and the New Zealanders in black with a silver fern emblem. The Kiwis were represented by D T Jones, D Corbett, R Claxton, R McAuley, C W Ballard, W Brownlee, W R Brundell, W Knott, I Cook, George Campbell, captain, and R Braithwaite. Seven thousand turned out to watch the match and New Zealand won by three goals to one. New Zealand took the lead through Cook and Bill Maunder equalised for the Australians. Knotts and Cook again scored for New Zealand in the second half and although Australia did create some chances, the home team deserved its win.

Australia managed to draw the second game in Wellington on 24 June one-all. This was a dour, defensive match with both teams more concerned with blocking the opposition than trying to score, according to the contemporary reports. J Bratten and George Brown came into the Australian line-up in place of William Dane and Tom Thompson. Ballard scored for New Zealand after about half an hour and ten minutes later Bratten scored the Australian goal after a throw in.

The third test also resulted in a three-one win to the Kiwis in Auckland. George Campbell, the Kiwi skipper opened the scoring early on and Cook made it two. Australia had its best spell early in the second half and George Brown got the only Australian goal with an excellent shot from distance. New Zealand restored its advantage when Dacre scored a third goal after Cartwright saved a shot by Campbell. Poor shooting let the Australians down. The play must have been typically robust as two Kiwis were knocked out during the match, but both recovered and played on.

Of the fourteen games played by the tourists, Australia won nine, so it was really only when they came up against New Zealand's full international team that they were found wanting. It may surprise some people to know that the game was so strong in New Zealand at the time, though the manager of the Australians, A. Morgan of Brisbane thought that the visit 'had done a great deal to liven up the game'. He said that the attendances at the international matches were 10,000, 14,000 and 9,000 and that over 60,000 people saw the Australians play. There may be some exaggeration in these figures, but obviously the matches were well attended.

If there were no major shocks on the field, there were elsewhere. There were earthquakes near Taupo in Waikato on the North Island at the time.

The tourists returned home on 17 July and the tour was said to be a financial success. The tourists played Maitland on the Thursday and 'Next best' at Wentworth Oval on the Saturday following their return. This idea of the tourists playing matches after completing their overseas commitments became common. Henry Gore, the man who took the pictures of the first game, was a pioneer of film-making in New Zealand. He went to Hollywood and became friends with Charlie Chaplin.

New Zealand sent a team to Australia the following year which won two of the three test matches played. Australia won by 2-1 in Brisbane but lost by 2-3 in Sydney and 1-4 in Newcastle, thanks largely to George Campbell who scored all four goals. He had contributed a hat-trick in Sydney.

I am indebted to Nick Guoth, Damian Smith and Gavin Bertram for assistance with this column. Damian's online football museum is one of the wonders of the modern age < <http://www.ozfootball.net/museum/index.php/en/info>>, while Nick's research on football in the ACT, the Commonwealth Football Association and relations with Asia is breaking new ground. Gavin Bertram is completing his own research on the tour in 1922.

Pascoe Vale FC Has One Hand On Futsal Title

Round 21 of the Nike V-League had emotion, drama and goals. At the top of the table Pascoe Vale have one hand on the title, Vic Vipers have secured second spot with a win over third placed Hume FC. At the bottom of the table Brighton FC won to give them a slim hope of avoiding the automatic relegation position.

Essendon too good for Balwyn
FC Essendon have had a great run of form in recent weeks and it continued in round 21 with victory over FC Balwyn 6-3. Joaquin Jimenez scored a sublime hat-trick as Essendon look to build for the 2013 season. FC Balwyn on the other hand are in a dangerous position and will need to win next week to ensure they avoid the automatic relegation position.

Prahran finally record a victory
FC Prahran have finally recorded a win after the Christmas break as they defeated CF Brunswick 6-5. In a match that was full of attack, both teams created a number of opportunities to win the match. Prahran looked dangerous late in the game and their hard worked paid off as they took the points in a thriller.

Ashburton and Moreland share the spoils

Ashburton and Moreland share the points playing out a 6-6 draw. Moreland started the match the better of the two teams and with 4 key personal out they surprised Ashburton. Ashburton have also shown in recent weeks they can score from any where and when keeper Lorenzo De Paris scored to give Ashburton the lead 6-5 you thought the game was over. Moreland to their credit never gave in and with 25 seconds remaining Moreland equalized from a corner when keeper Emre Ocal shot found its way through the defence and into the far post for a dramatic finish to an exciting match.

Pascoe Vale does the business again

Pascoe Vale again showed why they are leading the competition with a solid 10-5 win over fifth place Metropolitan FC. Pascoe Vale dominated possession for large periods during the match and it was target Sofiane Soufi who was the star of the show with a four-goal haul. Alija Redzepovic tried hard for Metro and chimed in with a hat-trick but his team had no answers for a superior Pascoe Vale side.

Vipers win incident marred match

Viper win to secure second position with 5-2 victory over Hume FC. In a match that was much anticipated as both clubs were playing for second position it lived up to the hype early on with both teams playing some quality Futsal. The second half was full of niggles and the good Vipers performance was marred when captain Miza Pedic was sent from the pitch after a disgraceful tackle in the dying minutes.

Brighton great escape still alive Brighton has kept their slim hope of survival in the top flight alive with a 4-2 over Fitzroy FC. Coming into the game Brighton required four points from the remaining two matches to give them a chance to avoid the automatic relegation position. Brighton's enthusiasm was evident from the opening whistle and Fitzroy had no answers as Brighton found the net to put the game out of reach.

NYL Season Concludes with Anti-Climax Finale

By Daniel Quinn

The 2012/13 National Youth League (NYL) came to an anticlimactic end with the Melbourne Victory being crowned NYL Champions for the first time, and the season can definitely be seen as a success with plenty youngsters earning themselves senior contracts.

The Victory, under the guidance of Darren Davies, travelled to the Central Coast in the last round with at least a draw ensuring their first title, while the Mariners needed to win to claim back-to-back championships. But due to the torrential weather in Gosford in the space of a couple of weeks the much-hyped “NYL Grand Final” was postponed twice, before FFA decided to cancel the fixture and record the game as a nil-all draw.

That draw was enough for Davies' squad to claim the title. Most people affiliated with the Mariners were very disappointed with FFA's decision, and to be fair, so they should, as every side should be given the chance to fairly fight in such an important game as this was. The Victory might have won the competition on goal difference (by 26 goals) with both sides finishing with a record of twelve wins, one draw and five losses, but the Melburnians did technically win one more game.

That's if you take in account Central Coast's Round 6 match with the Brisbane Roar. The Roar won 1-0, however, the three points were taken off Brisbane and given to the Mariners since the Queenslanders fielded too many overage players. So the Mariners actually won eleven wins compared to Victory's twelve. But the Victory just don't deserve the title on their results, but also their performance and pure dominance over their opponents. Davies' side averaged over three goals a game over the course of the season, scoring 57 (the most) and Victory's Luc Jeggo (leftt) and Mariners' Louis Bozanic battle it out. conceding only 20 (the least). The likes of Connor Pain, Andrew Nabbout, Luke O'Dea and Chris Cristaldo had sensational seasons and were all rewarded with their senior debuts. Pain and Nabbout also signed senior deals. Credit should be given to the Mariners who stayed with the Victory all the way with both sides having considerable time in the lead. Attacker Patrick Dixon and defender Hayden Morton were standouts in a squad that regularly comprised of A-League squad members Adrian Pellegrino, Olivier Bozanic and Adam Kwasnik. The Newcastle Jets finished in third, six points behind the top two, lead by former Socceroo Clayton Zane. Senior striker Marko Jesic played the majority of the season in the NYL side and was magnificent with thirteen goals, including three hat-tricks, before being rewarded with a spot in the senior squad in recent weeks. But follow Jets forward Kale Bradbery got one over his teammate, finishing with the Golden Boot after scoring 16. Jets fullback Andrew Hoole was another rising start of the NYL who earned himself a senior deal after making seven A-League appearances. After losing Captain Jason Geria to the Victory in November, the Roar ended the inconsistent season in fourth on 30 points, but would have finished in third if it wasn't for the aforementioned points deduction. But like the Victory, Brisbane's season can be classified as a success with Ben Liftin and Kwame Yeboah inking senior contracts. Yeboah and Skipper Corey Brown also made their A-League debut. Senior squad members James Meyer and Korean Do Dong-Hyun were also frequently involved with made his A-League debut at sixteen. Alec Uroevski and Peter Triantis also debuted with the latter also following the trend and penning a senior deal. The Sky Blues though finished the season without Josh MacDonald who travelled to England to trial with football giants Liverpool. Last but definitely not least are the AIS who only finished with two wins all season under coach Tony Vidmar, both against Perth, and with the worst goals for and against records. But the AIS certainly will have some great memories from a tough season as Skipper Scott Galloway moved to the Victory and now regularly plays for the senior outfit. Joshua Barresi also moved onto the Wanderers, while Steve Kuzmanovski shined throughout and remains with the Institute for the time being. The NYL isn't about the results after all. The main aim is to develop the country's youngsters into A-League and potentially Socceroo players and if you take that into consideration the there is no doubt the 2012/13 season is a success on many fronts.

Schalke 2 Galatasaray 3 (agg 3-4)
Galatasaray progressed to the quarter-finals of the Champions League thanks to a 3-2 away win against Schalke. Roman Neustädter put the hosts ahead early on, but goals from Hamit Altintop and Burak Yilmaz turned the game on its head. Michel Bastos equalised after the break, but a third goal proved to be a step too far for Jens Keller's side, and Umut Bulut ended the contest in second-half stoppage time.

Barcelona 4 AC Milan 0 (agg 4-2)
Barcelona marched into the Champions League quarter-finals with a 4-0 victory over AC Milan at Camp Nou on Tuesday. The Catalans were tipped for an early exit from the competition after a 2-0 loss in Italy in the first leg of their round-of-16 clash, but became the first ever team to recover from that first-leg deficit with a display that showcased the best of their awesome attacking quality.

Lionel Messi needed only five minutes to open the scoring in sublime fashion, before putting his side level on aggregate with his second goal shortly before the interval. David Villa put Barca 3-0 ahead 10 minutes into the second half, and Jordi Alba added the clincher in the last minute of injury time and Milan, despite a late improvement, could have little complaints about the 4-2 aggregate defeat.

Bayern Munich 0 Arsenal 2 (agg. 3-3)
Arsenal exited the Champions League at the last-16 stage for the third consecutive year despite beating Bayern Munich 2-0 in the second leg. Olivier Giroud stunned the 68,000 sell-out Allianz Arena with a third-minute goal to give the visitors hope of pulling off a Munich miracle. Despite Bayern dominating for most of the match, Arsenal held firm at the back and Laurent Koscielny's 84th-minute header equalled scores on aggregate. This set up a pulsating finale but Arsenal were unable to score the goal required to overturn the 3-1 first-leg deficit and exited by account of the away goals rule. The two-legged defeat means that Bayern become the third European powerhouse in three years to knock Arsenal out at the last-16 juncture, following Barcelona in 2011 and AC

Malaga reached the quarter-finals of the Champions League after a 2-0 home triumph over Porto at La Rosaleda. Heading into the second leg trailing 1-0 on aggregate, Malaga levelled the last-16 tie through a sublime goal from Isco just before half-time. The hosts dominated the second half after Porto midfielder Steven Defour was shown a red card in the 49th minute before Roque Santa Cruz secured the win with a header 13 minutes from time. There was very little to separate the two teams at the Dragao three weeks ago and it was clear the return leg would follow suit within 10 minutes of kick off, but neither Joaquin nor Danilo managed to test the opposing goalkeeper from decent positions.

Fans Upset At Price Hike

A lot of discontent has been vented these past weeks amongst fans with with prices of match tickets for both Copa Libertadores and World Cup Qualifying matches.

An example of the prices were at Huachipato who are the current Chilean league champions, charging $15,000 pesos, the equivalent of just over AU$35 which is beyond affordability for most pockets as the cheapest for general admission, or the “gal-eria” section.

As for qualifiers that recommence on the 26th of March, prices were hiked up to over AU$30, the cheapest.

Despite such prices, the al-located tickets have been sold out as Chile hosts Uruguay at the Nacional stadium. In a continent wide survey, Chile tops the list for the highest attendance in World Cup qualifiers followed by Colombia, Uruguay and Argentina respectively.

Back to club level, a study by newspaper El Mercurio revealed Brazil tops the highest price range for match tickets in do-mestic club football with the average price of over AU$20, with Copa Libertadores over $30 and for the national team, over $40 the most affordable.

These figures may not surprise many however in Latin Ameri-can economies where the mean salary does not surpass $400 a month, football becomes an ex-pensive pastime.

The study also showed that Ven-ezuela, very hardly hit by reces-sion and the disruption of its lead-er Hugo Chavez comes in second with the highest ticket prices averaging over $20, followed by Colombia and Argentina with $15 equivalent, with Peru, Paraguay and Bolivia the cheapest from $5 to $10 each.

BERNARD, THE NEW STAR
Luiz Felipe Scolari's strategy since returning as Brazil coach in December last year has been clear; to form a core of experienced players who are performing well at club level and mould them into a side in time for the upcoming challenges of the Confederations Cup and then, ultimately, the World Cup beyond that.

Veterans Fred, Luis Fabiano, Hulk and Ronaldinho were all included in the squad to face England last month, while the Madrid-based duo of Kaka and Diego Costa have been called for upcoming challenges against Italy and Russia. The aim, as begun by former coach Mano Menezes, SOLD OUT: Tickets for the World Cup qualifier derby between Peru and Chile are nowhere to be found.

is to surround the young attack-ing talents of Oscar, Neymar and Lucas Moura with experienced heads. The return of Kaká to the Brazil squad last October appeared to add a settling influ-ence to a side that had been out of sorts and Scolari will doubtless hope the same occurs once more this month.

Does the insistence on certain age and experience quotas, though, result in the best play-ers being selected? Supporters of Atletico Mineiro attacking midfielder Bernard, in particular, would argue not.

Bernard is the latest potential global star to have emerged from the Brazilian championship. While Neymar, Oscar and Lucas now claim headlines worldwide with the their performances, though, the 5'5" forward's fame is currently more or less limited to his homeland. However, fol-lowing some excellent recent performances, it may not remain that way for long. Indeed, it says much of his progress that his ab-sence from the recent national side selection came as somewhat of a surprise to many. Mutter-ings in the media prior to the an-nouncement indicated that the in-form youngster would be handed his opportunity to impress in Scolari's side.

That was not to be but Bernard is clearly heading in the right direction. A recent Copa Lib-ertadores hat-trick in his first competitive match outside Brazil was indication of his rise to the top, with Argentina's Arsenal de Sarandi simply unable to prevent him reaping havoc. The “little phenomenon”, was the verdict of the Argentine media who were left flabbergasted that such a talent was not involved in the na-tional team setup. An impressive tally of 11 goals and 11 assists in the 2012 Brazilian championship would suggest that their disbelief has sound basis.

Bernard is also a hard worker without the ball, relentlessly tracking opponents and seeking to regain possession. Indeed, at club level, it is the willingness and industry of the youngster that somewhat allows team-mate Ronaldinho to play the game at his own pace. The former Bar-celona man has, in turn, played some of his best football of recent years since joining the club.

The duo make an unusual part-nership in many ways, but it was their symbiotic relationship that helped inspire Atlético Mineiro to a second placed finish last season. Ronaldinho, freed up by the unceasing energy of his co-league, was afforded space and time to influence the game in central areas. Despite the decline in his overall abilities, he remains more than capable of dismantling a defence in these conditions. Bernard, in turn, has collected numerous goals courtesy of his colleague's outstanding talent for threading a ball through the eye of a needle to prove he is more than just a workhorse.

Like nearly all in his position in Brazil, Bernard is capable of improvisation and invention that leave many astounded. He may not delve into his catalogue of tricks with the regularity of some but he is more than capable of pulling off the remarkable. Given his low centre of gravity and sear-ing pace, though, Bernard often favours the more simple approach of embarrassing his adversary in an old-fashioned footrace. Fluid in his positioning, Bernard is one of the more modern playmakers that Brazil has to offer. Besides creativity and intelligence, he of-fers dynamism, goalscoring and, of course, industry to his side in attacking areas. He is, one might suggest, one of the best suited of the country's talents regarding the adaptation to the fluid, fast-paced football that is prominent in the upper echelons of Euro-pean football.

When Bernard's chance will come is unresolved but there is no doubt that he will eventually force his way into the Selecao reckoning. He may not be the equal of Neymar, who is on a level of his own talent-wise, but there is a growing feeling that he could match the levels of Lu-cas Moura or Oscar if given the chance to shine. A home-based international against Chile next month may just be his moment in the spotlight.

Scolari knows that Brazil will need experienced heads in 2014 but he will also know that he cannot afford not to select his best players, regardless of age. Bernard is certainly presenting the experienced Brazil manager with a very welcome selection di-lemma to consider over the next 15 months. Wise money, though, would be stacked on his inclu-sion come June 2014.

Copa Libertadores wrap: Velez Sarsfield beats Penarol
Uruguayan giants Penarol are in danger of missing the knockout stages of the Copa Libertadores after losing on Tuesday.

Penarol – who have won the competition five times – dropped their second Group 4 match on the trot, losing 3-1 against Velez Sarsfield of Argentina.

They still sit second in the group, but only by goals scored, with Ecuadorian side Emelec equal on points and goal differ-ence in third.

The latest defeat came despite Fabian Estoyanoff's 24th-minute penalty, which gave Penarol the lead.

Velez Sarsfield were playing in front of their home fans though, and they quickly mustered a response when Penarol goalkeeper Enrique Bologna scored an own goal.

Federico Insua then bagged a 75th-minute penalty before a late Jonathan Copete strike wrapped up the win for the Argentines.

Velez Sarsfield now top Group 4 with three wins from four matches.

In Group 2, Sporting Cristal claimed a 1-1 draw with Libertad of Paraguay.

Pablo Velazquez fired Liber-tad – who lead the group with eight points from four matches – ahead early in the second half before the Peruvian side levelled through Irven Avila on 74 min-utes.

In other matches, last year's semi-finalists Universidad Chile slumped to a 2-0 home loss against Newell's Old Boys of Argentina.

Universidad still top the group but the win was crucial for New-ell's Old Boys, who had failed to pick up a point in their two previ-ous Group 7 matches.

Maximiliano Rodriguez and Martin Tonso scored for the win-ners.

And in Group 8, Venezuelan side Caracas came from behind to beat Brazilian outfit Gremio 2-1.

Scolari keen to emulate World Cup great

Luis Felipe Scolari is deter-mined to win the World Cup with Brazil on home soil in 2014, emulating Italy legend Vittorio Pozzo's double suc-cess.

Scolari won the 2002 tournament with the Selecao and is looking to repeat the feat after retaking the job in November 2012, replacing Mano Menezes.

“Now it's up to us to win the World Cup at home,” he told La Gazzetta dello Sport.

“Playing a World Cup at home and going down in history tempt-ed me back. The only coach who has won two World Cham-pionships was Vittorio Pozzo, in 1934 and 1938. I want to be the second.

“Italy lost a World Cup at home, France and Germany as well. All three, however, have also won one at home. Now it's our turn: this is what I will say to the team. I want to talk only of positive things. Before the final of the 2002 World Cup, we did not speak of the problem with Ronaldo in 1998 and with him we won.”

The former Chelsea boss also reflected on his time with the Blues and admits that, while the owner was not the reason why he left the London club, some of the players did have a part in his departure.

“The results were not spectac-ular, but they were decent. I had problems with two or three play-ers that made it difficult for me to stay,” he said.

“Abramovich was not a problem. He was a good president, never intruded. For me it was sad to leave English football, I liked the organisation, the fans, and the style of the club.”

Scolari also spoke of the coaches that he holds in high regard.

“(Jose) Mourinho is one for sure, (Pep) Guardiola another, (Vicente) Del Bosque was voted best coach in the world and (Sir Alex) Ferguson is the best of the past 20 years,” he added.

Paris Calling

By Samuel Collins

There was much anticipation that Sunday evening's Choc des Olympiques would produce plenty of excitement. The previous eight league meetings between Lyon and Marseille had returned 35 goals. There was even a spectacular 5-5 draw back in 2009. But last night's tedious clash at the Stade de Gerland won't live long in the memory. Between them, the two teams conjured up just three attempts on target. Though, it was L'OM who were essentially to blame for this drab affair.

"We couldn't break down a well-organised defence," Lyon coach Rémi Garde explained. The visitors defended admirably. Their goalkeeper and captain Steve Mandanda was outstanding, whilst on-loan midfielder Joey Barton was perhaps his side's best outfield performer. It was clear that Elie Baup, the Marseille manager, was content with a point from the outset.

"Out aim was to press them from the off and we succeeded at that,"

PSG edge closer to French title

Zlatan Ibrahimovic scored twice in PSG's 2-1 win over Nancy.

a jubilant Baup told reporters. "When you see what happened when we played Lyon in the reverse fixture, this is a good point for us." Baup, of course, is referring to the game back in November, when he watched his team lose 4-1 courtesy of a Bafétinbi Gomis hattrick. But the French international forward couldn't add to his 12 Ligue 1 goals this time around. Stiffled out by Marseille's excellent centre-halves Nicolas N'Koulou – who continues to be watched by some of Europe's elite clubs – and Lucas Mendes, a £1.75m signing from Brazilian side Coritiba.

The eventual winners on the weekend were Paris-Saint Germain who extended their lead at the top of Ligue 1 to four points. It would be premature to assume that PSG now had the French title all but sewn up, though it's difficult to see their rivals catch them, even with ten fixtures still to be played. Carlo Ancelotti's men came from behind to defeat Nancy on Saturday, once again dug out by the imperious Zlatan Ibrahimovic.

The Swede, in the middle of a European suspension, notched up his 25th and 26th strikes of the campaign respectively, and while there were promising displays elsewhere – Marco Verratti again gave an accomplished performance – it's the £18m superstar striker who remains the talisman for PSG.

"The next three weeks will be important," said Ancelotti after his side's tenth league win in fourteen. "The match against Saint-Etienne will be vital." That tie takes place on Sunday, two days after the Parisians find out who they will meet in the Champions League quarter-finals. ASSE haven't lost a game in almost three months and have won 6 of their last 8 in Ligue 1. That impressive form has seen Christophe Galtier's side climb to fourth where they sit just two points behind third-placed Marseille. Participation in next season's elite European competition is Baup's aim; "Results this weekend show there are plenty of teams trying to get into Europe." Cash-strapped L'OM will be desperate to maintain their lead over the likes of Saint-Etienne, Nice and Lille. Money is so tight at the Stade Vélodrome these days that the squad often take a coach to away games, when flying would be the preferable choice. It's an incredible contrast to the financial wealth that PSG can boast. It's no secret that Lyon's bank balance isn't exactly booming right now, either.

Yet, despite their honesty, commitment and resilience, Lyon and Marseille, ultimately, and understandably, lack the quality of the league leaders. Should PSG fall victims to the chasing pack once again, like they did to Montpellier last year, it's hard to envisage Ancelotti managing in Paris next season, regardless of president Nasser al-Khelaifi's "he will still be here" claim.

SHORT PASSES

Tevez charged with driving offence

Manchester City striker Carlos Tevez has been charged for driving while disqualified and without insurance. In a statement, Cheshire police confirmed that the 29-year-old was arrested on the A538 in Macclesfield at 5:13pm on Thursday March 7 and was later released on bail.

The Argentina international answered bail on Wednesday at Middlewich Custody Suite and was formally charged.

Tevez will appear before Macclesfield magistrates on April 3.

The maximum penalty for driving while disqualified is six months imprisonment for a first-time offender.

The former Manchester United star was disqualified from driving for six months in January after failing to provide pertinent information after his car was clocked speeding.

Tevez, who does not have a UK driving licence, denied he was driving when the car was caught speeding in January and attributed his lack of correspondence with the police to him not understanding the world 'constabulary' on official letters.

Mourinho denies Real exit talk

Real Madrid coach Jose Mourinho has dismissed suggestions he will leave the club if they win the Champions League. Mourinho left Porto and Inter respectively in the wake of lifting European club football's most prestigious prize with those clubs.

However, the Portuguese has denied speculation he would be content to repeat the narrative with the Liga holders at the end of this season.

"I never base my decisions on whether I win or not," Mourinho told The Sun.

"I work at the top level every day, thinking only about the club and never worrying about myself."

The 50-year-old has been linked with a move to Manchester City or a possible return to Chelsea and has never hidden his affection for the Premier League.

Real have put up a poor defence of their La Liga title this term, with Mourinho's future also made uncertain by reported disagreements with senior players.

Greece
Olympiacos has clinched its 40th Greek title and their third in succession after cruising to a 3-0 victory against AEK Athens FC on the day of their 88th anniversary.

Olympiacos Spanish manager Michel says, "We are obviously overjoyed with the league title and our goal now is to achieve the domestic double."

Playing in front of a packed crowd at the Georgios Karaiskakis Stadium on Sunday, the Piraeus outfit made short work of AEK to keep themselves 16 points clear of nearest challengers Asteras Tripolis FC with five games remaining. Captain Avraam Papadopoulos got the ball rolling when he met Rafik Djebbour's header from a José Holebas cross and scored with 14 minutes gone, giving Olympiacos the perfect start in only his second match back since picking up an injury at UEFA EURO 2012.

The defending champions were entirely dominant and increased their lead on 56 minutes, again through Papadopoulos, who doubled his tally with a towering header from another Holebas cross. Six minutes later, Djebbour provided his second assist of the evening and his fellow Algerian international Djamel Abdoun registered with a close-range finish.

For coach Michel, appointed in February, the victory represented a first league trophy of his coaching career, and the Spaniard was understandably delighted. "I'm very happy and glad to have contributed to the evolution of this big club," he said. "We are obviously overjoyed with the league title and our goal now is to achieve the domestic double. I dedicate this title to my players who have followed my instructions to the letter."

Olympiacos overcame PAS Giannina FC in the Greek Cup quarter-finals 2:0 with second half strikes from Maniatis and Abdoun.

FYROM
The Football Federation of Macedonia (FFM) has launched a new campaign called '100% Football' in a bid to reinforce its zero-tolerance policy towards violence and any kind of discrimination in the game.

The campaign is designed to have an impact in educating fans against these negative phenomena and promotes diversity and respect, mirroring values that UEFA holds dear. "Through this campaign we're sending a clear message: zero tolerance against any form of violence and discrimination at football stadiums in our country," said FFM president Ilcho Gjorgjoski during the launch of the campaign in Skopje. "Football should unite people, promote different cultures and call for mutual respect."

The Macedonian First League has resumed after its three-month winter break, and Gjorgjoski emphasised that the launch date of the campaign was no coincidence. "I hope that our message will reach out to everyone, and that the clubs and the fans, as well as every admirer of this game, will join us in this initiative," he said. "What we want to see at every football stadium is respectful cheering from the stands, as well as no violence."

For the purposes of the campaign, the FFM has already staged several seminars, one of which was dedicated to the fight against match-fixing. UEFA representatives were present to explain the European body's efforts to eliminate corruption from the game. The association is working together with educational institutions, the ministries of the interior and education in FYROM, and the national agency for youth and sports. Promotional work includes a video and radio spot, public TV debates featuring fan groups, clubs and the interior ministry, and printed material. A week of activities against discrimination and violence in sport will be organised annually, featuring football tournaments for fans, officials and representatives of other associated sectors, such as journalists and police.

Macedonian footballers from different ethnic backgrounds have taken part in the promotion of this long-term campaign. Their common call is for such phenomena to be eliminated from the game. "As a professional, my main concern is what I do on the pitch, but the feeling of respect for what I am giving for the club, and especially for the national side, is the biggest motivating factor for even better results," said FYROM midfielder Agim Ibraimi, a campaign promoter. "The main goal for fans that come to the games should be to have fun, celebrate our achievements, and give us their support."

Ibraimi's FYROM team-mate Ivan Trickovski also made a key point: "All of us in the national squad are like one big family, no matter what our background is. I would really like to see the fans respecting us, and also showing each other the same respect that we, the players, give one another."

Galatasaray are through to the UEFA Champions League Quarter Finals following a thrilling 3:2 win away to German side Schalke.

Rodgers' Liverpool learning the ropes

A couple of weeks ago, I spoke to a friend, an adamant Liverpool fan, who said that he believed his Reds team were exceptional against the bottom placed teams, but against the bigger boys, Manchester United, City, Chelsea etc, they struggled.

He had a point. Against the likes of Manchester United, City, Chelsea, Arsenal, Tottenham and even Everton, a total of 10 games so far this season, they never managed a single win. Until last Sunday.

The 3-2 over Tottenham marked the first “major” victory for Brendan Rodgers in his first season at Liverpool. In the process, it ended Tottenham's 12 match unbeaten run, saw a hat-trick of league wins for the first time this season, and some even say, ignited the chance for capturing European success.

The 3-2 over Tottenham marked the first “major” victory for Brendan Rodgers in his first season at Liverpool. In the process, it ended Tottenham's 12 match unbeaten run, saw a hat-trick of league wins for the first time this season, and some even say, ignited the chance for capturing European success.

It might seem a little too optimistic that Liverpool can eclipse Chelsea in the final push for Champions League football come the month of

Steve Gerrard secures the points for Liverpool in the 3-2 thriller over Spurs

May. They can make a strong finish to the season with a fifth place finish bringing another year of the Europa League. This year though wasn't about making European places; it was about progression and more importantly acceptance.

Rodgers came with a game plan, a way he wanted things done. The questions were there: how long would it take the Liverpool players to believe in his methods? Would they accept it with open arms? Or would they reject it?

Successful transitions or implementations are based on success. Pep Guardiola, the man who created the Messi-led Barcelona team, brought a very unique style of play to the Catalans team. The way, of which the players adopt the tiki-taka system, and the success it brought, meant the players believed in his approach to the game.

Of course, the calibre of players is vastly different between the two sides. Success is harder to come for Liverpool than Barcelona, given the current state of both sides. Credit is due to Rodgers, despite being short-changed in regards to the transfer funds has made a massive impact on the Reds.

The players have clearly taken Rodgers' plan on board. Three players that best typify this change are Steven Gerrard, Stewart Downing and Luis Suarez. The former has had to adapt; known for his screaming long balls, and bustling runs, Gerrard has had to become the creator deep in the midfield, pulling the strings. He is the adaptation that Rodgers required.

As for Downing, once labelled the one of the worse transfers done by the club, has grown significantly throughout the year. His impact hasn't been enormous enough to be considered anything major, and there are still areas for improvement. The change though has been in attitude, and the result has clearly shown.

The Uruguayan, is the equivalent of what Xavi is to Barcelona. Not in skill, or quality, but in the systematic belief. Suarez is what Rodgers wants Liverpool to become: fast, slick, dangerous, goal hungry, but a determined winner, a team player, a fighter.

Success breeds belief, and while Liverpool won't have any major trophies in the cabinet this year, they've shown they are earmarked for future glory. Accepting the game plan was only the start. Now comes the hard part making: that step up from pretenders to contenders.

EPL Preview

There are some City players that are fighting for their careers in Manchester. That is no understatement here. The audition of who stays and who goes has already started with 10 games left (and a possibly 12, if City make the FA Cup final) this season.

The reality is that a few City players won't be wearing the sky blue next season. The reasons are two-fold: Roberto Mancini has already stated that his side needed more “quality” to retain the title. He didn't get the signings he wanted, just the ones available to him.

Now with his point clearly made, the City board, including former Barcelona chief executive and director of football, Ferran Sorriano and Txiki Begeristain, will provide Mancini with the players he excessively craves for. Which means, when new players come in, old players go out.

Secondly, some of the players have run their course with the club: through poor form, unreliability or the fact that they aren't just part of the club's plan anymore. This list is a big one with the gang headed by the likes of Maicon, Edin Dzeko, Scott Sinclair, Kolo Touré and Samir Nasri.

Nasri's future comes as no big surprise. The Frenchman has struggled to live up to expectations since his arrival from Arsenal. Mancini's public attacks on the Frenchman might not have helped, but it's a proven method for the Italian throughout his career.

Sinclair was a ridiculous purchase made by the club. Not because of Sinclair's abilities (he's actually an fantastic talent) but because there was never any plan for him. He was merely a signing in case of a plan 'B'. So too was the decision to bring in Maicon.

Dzeko's future is a funny one. The clubs wants him, but also might sell him. He's been recently linked to a return to the Bundesliga, most notably to Borussia Dortmund. Both clubs have since denied the allegations, but it's hard not to look pass the fact that Dzeko is in a similar vein to Mario Balotelli: in the sense that he always needs to play. He thrives when he's the main man, not the super-sub.

Then we come to the players with only with their contracts running out, including Gareth Barry, Joleon Lescott and Carlos Tevez.

Barry you can say, is safe; the hard-working man, he's loved by Mancini. Lescott has been on the outer for a while, and has rarely been given the chance this season, much like Kolo Toure.

As for Tevez, what can be said about the Argentinian? No one doubts his talents and nowadays his cooled temperament. The recent report that he was caught speeding without a drivers' licence means a possible jail sentence. That action might cost his future with the club. Would City harbour a player who could be jailed? Or would it be better to cut him loose?

Also, no player is safe if the right deal comes along. That might be particular difficult, considering that it's City who offer the ridiculous fees and money for players. Nevertheless, it's happened before (eg. Balotelli to AC Milan and who thought that would happen?)

Come the end-of-season; expect a vicious and violent cull. There will be definite departures. City's next game is against Everton at Goodison Park, but unfortunately for some of the players the audition has already begun.

Will Sir Alex decide that Rooney's time is up?

London Eye

By Eddie Gray

There was once a time, not long ago, when a Manchester United side without Wayne Rooney was incomprehensible.

The talismanic forward would often be the key figure in the United team, with his goals, assists and general influence around the pitch unrivalled.

But on the night of the Manchester club's departure from the Champions League, in controversial fashion to Real Madrid, their biggest game since the defeat in the final of the same competition to Barcelona in 2011, Rooney was confined to the bench until late on in the second half.

Back in the 2011 campaign the Englishman was the figure manager Sir Alex Ferguson based his side around, however, fast forward to March the fifth 2013, both Nani and Danny Welbeck were favoured to the previously imperious Rooney.

The pace of Nani and Welbeck on the counter attack was the obvious thought in Ferguson's mind, as well as the latter's ability to be disciplined and negate the influence of Xabi Alonso, but you still would have expected to see Rooney deployed out wide because of his impressive work rate.

However, his omission in such a game of enormous magnitude has left many wondering whether the former Everton man still possesses the confidence and trust of his manager.

It's new contract time for Wayne Rooney at Old Trafford. Will Sir Alex Ferguson have room for the English superstar at Manchester United.

Ever since the summer transfer of Robin Van Persie to the Red Devils Rooney has had to play second fiddle to his new team mate, with the Dutchman instantly taking to life at Old Trafford and emerging as the most prominent attacking threat at the club, displacing the Englishman himself.

Although Van Perise has become the main man at United his strike partner has been a regular for the majority of the season, with both paired in attack regularly, but when the biggest moment of the season arose there was no place for Rooney.

Not selecting the Englishman raised eyebrows amongst many at the time, especially when you consider his performance the previous weekend. The striker had assisted two and scored himself in the 4-0 demolition of Norwich making the decision even more sceptical.

So despite being in form Rooney was left out, which highlighted the choice to do so was driven by Ferguson's belief that Rooney has failed to deliver to the level you would expect from England's 6th time record goal scorer.

The forward has been excellent in fits and starts this season, there is no doubt about that, but the lack of consistency in his performances has been a real worry. Ferguson has often stated, this year alarmingly regularly, that the United number 10 'takes a few games to get fit after an injury'. This admission has led some to believe that Rooney is not looking after his body like a top level athlete should do, which leaves him short of the sharpness required to excel at the very top level week in week out.

Going back to the Real Madrid game and the decision to not select Rooney in the starting 11, it also raises the issue over whether Ferguson still believes in the attacking prowess of his forward and what he can provide on the grandest stage. Previously when Cristiano Ronaldo was the pinnacle of the United team Rooney would be used in a more reserved role, where he would use his tenacity and desire in defence and then could spring forward and utilise his passing and creative streak. But now it seems the attacking attributes he brings to the table, and his off the ball work, are no longer valued as highly by Ferguson, who clearly indicated by picking Welbeck in the Madrid game that he has overtaken Rooney as the chief supporting striker in elite matches.

There is no doubt that Rooney will play in the majority of United games until the end of the season, the Premier League hasn't this year provided the challenges of the Champions League, and his talents are still at the level where he could quite easily be the player who is most impressive for his side until the end of the year, but the signs at the moment are that Ferguson has grown tired of the man he signed as a youngster.

Although Van Perise has become the main man at United his strike partner has been a regular for the majority of the season, with both paired in attack regularly, but when the biggest moment of the season arose there was no place for Rooney.

But in complete contrast, Ferguson gave his word in a press conference on Friday the eighth that Rooney would be at the club next season, but then again he also denied the sales of Ronaldo, Veron and that the club were in for Van Persie last summer, leaving the Rooney saga up in the air, still with no real answer.

If Rooney does depart it may shock many, but the United manager has never been shy of getting rid of high profile players who he feels have become stagnant: Ruud Van Nistelrooy and David Beckham to name but two.

The demand for his signature may not be as high as it once was as his current wage stands at £250,000 and only a few clubs can and even less will be willing to meet that. The two stand out options if, and it is still a big if, Rooney does move on are Paris St Germain and Chelsea. Manchester City and Real Madrid stand just behind those two, but a move to France or London seem the most likely as United are unlikely to sell to their nearest rivals and Madrid already have a plethora of attacking options.

The potential PSG transfer would suit Rooney's current employers as they could easily pay the required fee, probably between £20-30 million, and could also meet the players wage demands, however it is debateable whether Rooney would want to move to another country with his young family and learn another language whilst trying to live up to a huge reputation.

Therefore a deal with Chelsea could have the highest possibility as the relocation required would be far less dramatic. They, like PSG, could match all the financial requirements, but are also in desperate need of a striker and a marquee signing is something owner Roman Abramovich loves to associate himself with.

It could be the end of an era at Old Trafford come the end of the year, with another star player potentially exciting, and many will rightly question the decision if it goes through, but what Sir Alex Ferguson has proven in the past is that the club will always be bigger than any player, no matter what reputation they posses.

And who can argue with his track record?

Ciao Palermo and Pescara?

Palermo and Pescara continued their poor form to move closer to Serie B, while at the other end of the table Juventus strengthened their grip on the Scudetto with a dramatic win, coupled with a Napoli loss. There were contrasting fortunes for the Milan duo.

25 coaching changes 11 years. 25 times Palermo President Maurizio Zamparini has waved goodbye, not always permanently, to a Coach – 51 if you include his years as owner of Venezia. Seemingly after each Palermo loss the tactician is at risk. The volcanic owner is notoriously short-term in his thinking. Some seasons the Sicilians have been able to absorb the changes and survive. Not so in 2012-13.

Palermo sat 19th ahead of the clash with fellow relegation threatened club Siena, having not won since November and just three times all season. Giuseppe Sannino started the season as Coach, but after three games was replaced by Gian Piero Gasperini. He lasted until February, when Alberto Malesani was hired. His reign lasted just 19 days. Back on the bench, Gasperini was hoping for a reversal in fortunes against the Tuscan club. The pair were locked on 21 points, although Siena would be clear of the relegation zone without a six-point deduction.

Tension was high at the Stadio Renzo Barbera. Siena had won just once on the road all term and their poor streak looked set to continue when Anselmo scored. Up at the break, Palermo were unable to kick-on. Stefano Sorrentino came out for a cross but never got close to the ball and Innocent Emeghara scored his fifth Siena goal since joining in January. Alessandro Rosina converted a penalty to give the Bianconeri a precious victory. It leaves Palermo precariously close to Serie B after nine seasons.

Rosanero director Giorgio Perinetti feels their issues are psychological, while Beppe Iachini is confident his side can survive. “We tried to put in a good performance and played good football. We look ahead with faith.”

On Monday Gasperini left by ‘mutual consent’, making it four coaching changes this season, more than the number of victories. To complete the symmetry, Sannino has returned to the bench. Simply incredible.

Joining Palermo with one foot in Serie B is Pescara, who despite a coaching change came up short at Atalanta. Cristiano Bergodi was replaced by Cristian Bucchi, but the youth team Coach doesn’t have a Serie A coaching licence, so was joined by Bruno Nobili on the bench. Gaetano D’Agostino fired Pescara into a shock lead, but a clumsy foul gave German Denis the chance to equalise from the penalty spot. He made no mistake. The Argentine then likely sealed Pescara’s fate when he smashed home the winner from close range in the second half.

Juventus left it late to defeat a stubborn Catania. The League leaders hit the post and were continually frustrated by Rolando Maran’s side. That was until the 91st minute, when substitute Emanuele Giaccherini finished from close range as the ball bobbled around in the penalty area.

While there was late joy for Antonio Conte’s side, things were different for Napoli. They succumbed to a 2-0 loss at Chievo, continuing their poor run versus the Flying Donkeys. Napoli have now lost four of their five Verona meetings, after Boukary Drame’s thumper from distance and Cyril Thereau’s sealer. Edinson Cavani’s goal drought extended to six League matches. The Uruguayan saw a second half penalty saved.

Milan prepared for their Barcelona showdown with a 2-0 win at Genoa. Giampaolo Pazzini was hobbling when he netted the opener, while his replacement Mario Balotelli scored the decisive second. Genoa felt they should have had at least one penalty as four first-half incidents went against them. City rivals Inter followed up a terrible Europa League showing at Tottenham by falling 1-0 at home to Bologna. Alberto Gilardino ruined the lacklustre Nerazzurri’s 105th birthday celebrations when he scored in the second half.

Elsewhere, a goal in each half saw Fiorentina overcome Lazio in Rome. Udinese came from behind to draw with Roma, while Victor Ibarbo’s hatrick gave Cagliari a 3-1 win over Sampdoria at empty Stadio Is Arenas. Finally, Torino were ahead at Parma in the 76th minute but collapsed to lose 4-1, with Amauri scoring a hatrick.

Looking ahead:
Can Napoli salvage second?
A few weeks ago they were eyeing Scudetto glory. Now it seems Napoli are more concerned with guarding second position – the last automatic Champions League spot – from a red-hot Milan. Napoli will welcome back captain Paolo Cannavaro from suspension and need Cavani to fire as they face Atalanta on Sunday.

Meanwhile, after their disappointing midweek elimination at the hands of Barcelona, Rossoneri minds return to domestic matters.

Brilliant Barcelona Back To Their Best

Lead by 2 early first half goals by the 4 time Ballon D’Or winner Lionel Messi, Barcelona became the first team to overcome a 2-0 deficit in the final stages of the “Champions League”, adding another 2 goals in the second half to win their Round of 16 tie against AC Milan, 4-2 on aggregate.

Speaking to www.uefa.com, Lionel Messi had these comments after the match; “Really, we needed a night just like that not only to get through but to erase that result in Milan. Everything came off perfectly. We did it. From the fifth minute when we got that important first goal, we just went after Milan in every moment. We wanted that opening goal as soon as possible in the match not only to cut the deficit but to make the fans feel it was going to happen. It was a really lightning quick movement of the ball to get it to me and, happily, I put it away.”

“Perhaps in the last few matches we’ve lost a little of our form. We knew, however, that to go through this tie all we really needed was to get back to being ourselves. We envisaged what kind of performance this needed to be and how to produce it.

Lionel Messi and David Villa were too hot to handle for AC Milan

This is the Barca that we and our fans want to see every game. This is the kind of performance we’ve been producing for years.”

In qualifying for the quarter-finals, Barcelona dropped from $6.50 outsiders just prior to kick-off, to $2.60 outright favourites for the 2013 Champions League title.

Despite the impressive display of football from Barca, AC Milan did have their chances to cause an upset in the 2nd leg at the Camp Nou in Barcelona. None more so than AC Milan’s M’baye Niang who was through on goal in the first half with only Barca’s goalkeeper Victor Valdes to beat, however his strike on goal hit the upright and was eventually cleared to safety by the home team.

AC Milan’s Ingazio Abate had this to say, as quoted on AC Milan’s website, of AC Milan’s capitulation at the Camp Nou; “It’s a shame as we had the chance to do them some damage. This season was a real chance to go further in this competition and to knock them out. They started very well but they were scared after the first leg result. We had a couple of chances but we didn’t take them. There’s a bit of bitterness as we could have managed things better in the middle of the field.”

“We just gave them the first half. We didn’t play at all and that was a mistake. You can’t just give them an entire half of the game. We created three or four chances in the second half but we didn’t make the most of them.”

Barcelona FC are still without their Coach Tito Vilanova, who is away in New York, USA receiving specialist treatment for throat cancer.

Tito is expected to be back in Barcelona in time for the next stage of the UEFA Champions League. The draw for the quarter-finals will be held Friday March 15 at UEFA headquarters

La Liga wrap:
Ronaldo brace sinks Celta
Real Madrid had Cristiano Ronaldo to thank as they struggled past a resilient Celta Vigo side 2-1 in La Liga action on Sunday.

The Portuguese star scored twice in what was a sloppy win for Jose Mourinho’s side, who looked a far cry from the team that overcame Manchester United in the Champions League last week.

Ronaldo scored his first in the 61st minute after Celta failed to clear a Luka Modric corner before Real were caught out from a quick throw-in just two minutes later, allowing Iago Aspas to level the scores.

Real goalkeeper Diego Lopez nearly gifted Aspas a second after he spilled the ball in the area but the visitors were soon ahead again after Kaka was brought down in the area by Varas, Ronaldo coolly chipping the ball in from the penalty spot.

Gonzalo Higuain missed a pair of chances to add some gloss to the finish and Mourinho’s blushes were spared in the last minute of normal time as Park Chu-Young’s header hit the bar and went behind.

The win sees Real overtake cross-town rivals Atletico Madrid into second place on the table after Diego Simeone’s side suffered a 1-0 loss at home to Real Sociedad.

Xabi Prieto struck what proved to be the match-winner for Sociedad in the 53rd minute as Atletico’s winless streak extended to three matches.

In the day’s other games, Athletic Bilbao managed a 1-0 win over Valencia while Levante and Getafe played out a 0-0 draw.

Pardeza: Real Madrid want to win

it all
Real Madrid executive Miguel Pardeza has warned the club’s rivals that they are intent on winning every title available to them.
Jose Mourinho’s side have struggled in retaining their La Liga crown this season, but are still in the hunt for both the Champions League and Copa del Rey.

“The goal is to win all the titles. We do not value what others do, we focus on our games,” the 48-year-old told Marca.

Mourinho’s future at the Santiago Bernabeu has been the subject of widespread speculation of late, but Pardez refused to comment on the rumours.

“I will not contribute to the debate about Mourinho,” he added. The former Spain international spent three years in the Spanish capital as a player before going to Real Zaragoza.
